PORCELAIN AND POTTERY MARKS

Identifying pottery doesn't have to be confusing. It can be simple as ABC.

"Porcelain & Pottery Marks" is a new book for collectors that takes all the guesswork out of identification. Here you'll find only the important European and American marks that the collector and dealer must know.

Published by Urban Hartman, well known New York antique dealer, it's a "must" for all collectors.

For your copy, send $2.50 to:

Our Ads may amuse you, confuse you, abuse you,
But our Antiques almost always will really enthrall you!

Light blue 9¼" Texian Campaign plate, small chip on underside doesn't show, $10.

Rare Intaglio Cut Glass 8" Iris pattern shallow dish, signed Hawkes, miter-cut leaves and star, same as in Smithsonian Inst., as illustrated in Daniel, plate 29, $17.50.

Not in the Smithsonian Institute is this amazing, brilliant Cut Glass 12¼" covered Punch Bowl, glass ladle, ten matching 3" punch cups with applied & notched handles, a truly fabulous set, $125.

As long as we are up in the three-figure bracket, we may as well invite you to picture the finest rosewood - walnut Gentleman's Chair with open arms and elaborately carved pears, melons, apples and grapes all across the top. The back is tufted and all upholstery is in excellent condition. For the best in Victorian, we can recommend this without reservation, without hesitancy — but not without $165 (crated).

Oh, we're loaded this month! Exceptional 24" Bisque Doll with rare incised "N" marking. Elaborately molded blonde hair arrangement is not the same on both sides. Pinched hourglass body, kid hands and feet, superb coloring and condition, $125.

Intelligent 3½" Staffordshire Cat, embossed bell around neck, black spatter splashes on yellow ground, tiny glaze flake on foot (probably caused in inspired if unsuccessful defense of her honor), $7.50. Reclining 3" spring Staffordshire Lamb, a little field-worn, but worth more than the $2.75 (half) price tag. Clear glass 5" Rabbit with Eggs covered dish, arched-panels base, $5. American Hen (Impr. Pat. Applied For) 6" white milk glass covered dish, burst rim bubble, $6.

Vaseline Raindrop 5-sided (pinched) Finger Bowl and matching 7¼" Plate, $12.50. Amber Hobnail with Ornamented Band (Lee pl. 82) cup, $4.75; same in blue, $5.50. Two 4" sq. flat D&B saucers or berry dishes, with amber buttons, $2.75 ea. Handsome 8" compote in Vaseline Cathedral, 8" tall, $12. Emerald green & gold Delaware 9½" lemonade tankard, $13.75. Amber 6" Square Peg Border Plate, $5.75. Vaseline Finecut 6¼" plate, $4.75. Unusual blue cannon or mortar covered Mustard Jar, rough flange and base, so just $6.50. Amethyst S-Repeat 6¼" footed condiment tray, $5.50. Sweet Pear apple-green creamer, $4.50. Honey-amber "Christmas" salt, $4.

Even if you've already got a pot, pause a moment and admire ours. It is 9½" Limoges china (T&V) with spectacular wild roses expertly hand-painted, trimmed in gold, with ornate gold handle and finial, all combining to make this the Teapot in a tempo, $13.75. Two exceptionally early 2" Pewter Salt Dips, $5.75 ea. Do You Know Me 6¼" iron penny bank, $12.50. Special job lot of Haviland Wedding Band china (marked only CFH), platters, tureens, relish, cream & sugar, cake plates, 16 pieces, $25.

Nobody but nobody has an oval Marble Picture Frame, so seeing is believing, ours is 8x10½" with 4¼x6½" opening, in an attractive mottled-gray color, $15. This Little Pig, etc. 6¼" clear glass Nursery Rhyme plate, $2.75. Rare blue transfer Teapot, U.S. Eagle & Shield, no cover, so it's only $13.50. Fine 1921 Calendar Plate with colorful quail in field, $4.75. Milk glass 8¾" Atterbury Lattice Compote, 7½" tall, center transfer of Field Flowers is somewhat worn, so just $23.75.

PATTERN GLASS: Arched Grape celery, $4.75. Cape Cod goblet, $4.50. Curtain 9" cakestand, $5. Daisy & Block goblet, $2.75. Dew & Raindrop 4½" sauce, $2. Dinner Bell jelly compote, $3. Festoon creamer, $4.50. Fishscale milk pitcher, $7.50; jelly compote, $3.50. Frosted Pheasant (Lee pl. 99) 8½" oval covered compote, $14.75. Gooseberry butter, finial nick, $6.50. Grasshopper (no hoppers) creamer, $4. King's Crown 7" covered compote on high standard, finial nick, $8.75; boat-shaped sauce, $2.75. Lacy Medallion toothpick, $3. Mikado Fan goblet, $2.75. Mitred Prisms goblet, $2.75.

Oak Wreath tumbler, $2.75. Odd Fellows knob-stem goblet, $5.50. Peacock Feather 8" lamp base, $5.50. Pressed Leaf goblet, $2.75. Primrose milk pitcher, $8.75. Rosette jelly compote, $3. Sandwich Loop flint 7" compote, $6.75. Spiralled Ivy tumbler, $2.75. Squared Star creamer, $5.75. Stippled Cherry 8" berry bowl, $2.75.

P. O. Box 1097

Providence, Rhode Island

A handsome early maple Boston Rocker in perfect structural condition, beautiful curved deep solid pine seat, spindles gracefully shaped to back, (only found in the early ones). This is down to the wood, ready to be either refinished or decorated as you desire. Price — $33.00

An old insurance fire marker from a two hundred year old house. Cast iron with hand drawn steamer embossed. Very early and decorative Oval. Price — $18.00

Early leather fire bucket with the original decoration in gold the letters B.M.O. No. 19 and the date 1825. Found in Bridgewater. The handle shows wear, so does the rim but the bucket holds water, and it's all intact. We consider it exceptional. Price — $19.00

One of the cutest wagon seats we have ever owned! It's a little one that was used on a "democrat," has wrought iron arms and back, and an adorable cut out base and it measures 14 by 20½ and it's 16½ tall. It would make a wonderful coffee or cocktail table and would double as a standing tray for the arms make a perfect handles to carry by. It's very lovely and very different. Beautifully finished. Price — $25.50

Beautiful old mahogany card table, a very early one made about 1830 with four delicately turned legs, and a solid two piece folding top. Its shape and size makes it perfect for a dining or breakfast table. Open, it measures 38½ square, and it is 29" tall. Closed, it is 38½ long and 19¼ deep. It's in the gorgeous original finish what WHAT a patina! Would grace any home. Price — $46.00

A wonderful old pine hanging spice cabinet with a darling shaped back, and six even sized drawers. We were so lucky to find this in Vermont at the end of a hard snowy day, hanging on the wall where it had been for over one hundred years. We have lovingly refinished it, and it's simply beautiful, a heavenly color. It's 24" long & 6" deep and 11¼" t., and then the sweet heart back rises another four inches, makes the top a shelf! Lovely! Price — $28.50

A small old amberina salt shaker with the original top, baby thumbprint. Rare indeed. Price — $16.50

A child's old picture book with highly colored illustrations many of which rate framing. Costume picturing styles about 1880. Text all in verse, including the story of the St. Bernard dog. Excellent condition. Price — $3.50

Another old picture book dated 1892, called the A.B.C. of Funny Animals. Wonderful condition, and beautifully colored prints. Price — $14.00

We have another pair of those so much wanted old iron store scales. These are painted red, and they have a big brass scoop that is all polished. Perfect condition, and just as decorative as they can be! Price — $14.00

An unusual brass mortar and pestle. This is a very heavy one. Has handles on both sides. Its very old. Measures 4½" tall and flares, measures across top 4¾", has handsomely worked 5" pestle. Its polished decorative and stunning. Price — $15.50

We have IRON TRIVETS, DOORSTOPS, BOOT-JACKS, FIREPLACE UTENSILS, etc.
WHITE MARBLE SHELVES, all sizes, iron shelf BRACKETS on which to set them.

MATTER OF FACT, what AIN'T we got?

Following - a few pictures hastily rounded up:

1. LARGE HOME? Big space to fill? - this is your dish! WALNUT ETAGERE, with fine BURL walnut trim. Cupboard base topped with FINE WHITE MARBLE. 47" wide, base 19" deep, 8 ft. tall overall. Good rough - AND REDUCED to $68.00.
2. WALNUT HALL TREE, cast iron umbrella drip pan missing in base, and needs repair at base right leg, where I have put circle. (Otherwise O.K.) only $15.00.
3. PAIR of deep green BARREL SHAPED BOTTLES, NOT absolutely proof, slight rim and under rim flakes. Would make nice lamps for the primitive room. $9.50.
4. EARLY ALL PINE, tapered Heppelwhite legs, one drawer, orig. knob, NIGHT STAND which can be used in Early American living room also. 15 1/2"x19" top, 29" tall. Only old dark red varnish to remove. - THIS IS THE BETTER TYPE PINE. $24.50.

5. Late Victorian CORNER CHAIR, type often seen in tintypes - WALNUT with whimsical style back. BROTHER! does this need upholstery job! - $18.00.

6. PAIR MAPLE slat back chairs, structure O.K. - need refinishing and reupholstering. Top slats have pretty panel trim. $14.50.

7. ROUNDED cast iron FENDER for Victorian fireplace. Has steel rail, nice to rest or warm your tootsies on - one little chip out of it, so placed at one end, it won't matter. $8.00.

8. Shelf clock, believe rosewood veneer, has pendulum, but NO key. Face needs rejuvenating. Glass door with orig. design intact. Can't make out maker! 16 1/2" tall, 10" wide. Will run after you fix it. $10.50.

9. Small size AUTHENTIC fretwork "Chippendale" MAHOGANY mirror, late 18th cent. to early 19th. Has 2 scrolls accurately restored - like most of us, antiques need repairs at some time or other. $18.00.

10. Table for the man of the house to work on - hard wood, may be maple base, PINE TOP - Center board EXTREMELY rough at one end, looks as if meat grinder had been clamped there year after year. Center 18x41" leaves drop 11", 29 1/2" high. $8.50.

11. ANOTHER BARGAIN for the "do-it-yourselfer" - ALL PINE TABLE, top is NOT original, but of old pine, needs hinge repair and resetting, now slightly offset. Paint to remove - center 16 1/2"x33", leaves drop 8", 28 1/2" tall. $8.50.

12. DRESSING MIRROR of dark CARVED OAK, difficult to establish age - but of the 16th century TUSCAN type. 2 drawers in base. A SCARCE piece of carved furniture. I handle much carved furniture, but this is the first DRESSING MIRROR I've found! Shows age, has a split here and there, but all intact. Base 13x33", 42" tall. $52.00.

13. INGRAHAM shelf clock, mahogany veneer, with slightest bit veneer chips at base. Original flower painting base door. Has NEW face. 4x10 1/2", 18" tall - runs but can't guarantee what will happen after traveling. $18.00.

14. VERY EARLY HORSE DOOR STOP, cast iron hollow-back horse, ON WOODEN BASE! - $7.00.

15. GOOD WALNUT drop-leaf extension table which has its 5th leg, but extra boards to extend got loose somewhere, 22 1/2"x41 1/2" center, leaves drop 15". Needs refinishing, only orig. varnish to remove. $35.00.

16. MOST DELIGHTFUL CORNER CHAIR to come my way in many a moon! In the GAY, ROCOCO Louis XV style. Structurally fine, no doubt, always gilded, but has been REGILDED at some time, you take it from there. Serpentine edge slip seat in usable gold slipper satin. Will compliment your French or even VENETIAN decor. $45.00.

Sincerest Congratulations to "HOBBIES" Magazine on their Silver Anniversary, many years of work well done! We at THE TREASURE CHEST are proud of having played a small part in the promotion of selling Antiques by Mail. It is a constant source of wonderment and pride that Collectors and other Dealers have such faith in their Fellow-man, and Brother-workers, to buy "sight-unseen." Our first advertisement in HOBBIES was in the year 1944, so we've travelled almost half the way, and to celebrate that fact we would like to do something very special. While circumstances didn't allow us to do much with pictures this month, you can be assured that all descriptions of items pictured, or not pictured, are as exact as we know how to make them. And unless a flaw is mentioned, the article is without imperfection. And here is our Celebration offer to you: The price of each item is marked 25 percent less than its tag reads here in our Shop. So, get busy, send those orders flying through the air; by Mail, by Telegram, or by Phone. You'll be glad you did because we guarantee satisfaction or your money re-funded, AND CHEERFULLY! Without question, OR delay.

1. Even those Harpins will raise their eye-brows at this. World War I, the War to end Wars, remember? U.S. Army canvas WATER BUCKET. Right one has orig. Label. "Mann, by the Seth Thomas Clock Co. Thomaston, Conn." Pendulum & alarm attachment inside. No works. Good gold stencilled Glass. The two for $4.50
2. And they'll be green with envy at these two CLOCK WRECKS. OUTSTANDING features: Left one has original face, pendulum, & alarm attachment inside. No works. Good gold stencilled glass. Right one has orig. Label. "Mann, by the Seth Thomas Clock Co. Thomaston, Conn." Pendulum & alarm attachment inside. No works. Good gold stencilled Glass. The two for $4.50

3. Wish you could see this JAPANESE PRINT, 15x17 1/2", because in spite of its rough condition it gives one the feeling of importance. Lined and re-lined with old papers covered with much Character writing, the border is embroidered silk. Needs repairing and cleaning. However, its origin prices it, with discount at $21.00
4. Silver-plated Swinging Tea-pot in standard, 11 1/2" tall. Mfd. & Pld. by Reed & Barton, 3330-8. Exceptionally graceful with its Gad-roon border, wide ribbed body and flower knob finial. Ivory heat insulation inserts. Original plate somewhat worn, but hand-polished and usable as is. The collared base of the pot has been slightly damaged from heat, and the alcohol burner's snuffer is gone. Neither important. A buy at $19.50
5. Table Lamp, 18" tall. Pretty solid brass center column, braced iron ribbed Trefoil foot. Has a soft colored Mushroom shade. Periwinkle blue to pale yellow with hand-stencilled floral wreaths. Electrified $9.00

6. Solid Mahogany Cabinet type STEROPTICAN, 10x6 1/2" closed. Has with it 15 large size Cabinet Photographs. Good early ones of Anas, Railway, etc. $13.50
7. Ingraham mantel CLOCK, painted black with brass ormolu trim. Pretty porcelain dial. 13 1/2" long, 12" tall. Complete $5.25
8. This graceful VASE is marked "Hand-painted Nippon," but it is fine quality china and beautifully painted with luscious shaded ORCHIDS. 10" tall, it has shaded gold handles and a lovely beaded design with blue enamelled jewels around the top $7.12
9. Genuine carved MEERSCHAUM PIPE, 3" long, no stem, but we have its original leather case. Exquisite fine detailed carving of two HUNTERS seated on a log drinking a Toast. $13.50
10. Another Collector's PIPE, 3 1/4" long, 2 1/2" deep, no stem. Delicately hand-carved from one piece of brownish "Stone." It has a Man's head, with Mustache, facing the front, whose leaf-carved Head-dress is the bowl. Another bearded, mustached, Man's head at the back, whose hat becomes the place for the stem. $13.50
11. One of those nice early Mahogany divided MIRRORS, no painting, but it has two mirrors. Hand-carved ROPE and fluted side posts with eight pendant Acorns, center one missing. Rosettes are two BRASS LION'S Heads. Original fine condition. 22x13 1/2" overall. $24.00
12. Lacy, all-brass extension Chandelier. Hangs 36". Not wired and not polished, but complete with brass Smoke-bell and all. Shade has six panels of Art Glass, marbled orange-yellow to white $19.50
13. and 14. Should you be planning to build a New-Old House, or the most Ultra-Modern, you can use these MARBLE SINKS.
13. This one has a 6 1/2" tall back, with 12x4 1/2" sides. Top is 20x23", beautiful Grey-veined

- Marble, and the Porcelain bowl is also grey-veined. One faucet needs re-placing and while the front is perfect, the back has a few flakes made when it was taken from its original room. $18.75
14. Was built in so that it never had a back or sides. The right hand side has a curved corner, and the left side is straight to place against the wall. Original, quaint, 7 1/2" tall faucets are perfect. Grey-veined marble top is 20" wide, 32" long, and has a white porcelain bowl. Completely perfect. $22.50
  15. John ROGERS Group, "Rip Van Winkle at Home." Finish flaked as usual, and someone has started to repair the Gun which needs more doing. Otherwise O.K. $7.50
  16. Collect IVORY CARVINGS? This is a Parasoil Handle, with silver ferule. 6" long with all-over carvings of Geisha Girl, Temple, Flowers, etc. Beautiful details. $9.00
  17. If you want something really OLD, here's a Pocket Set of HAND BALANCES, brass GOLD SCALES in their original 5x2 1/2" Toilet Box. Has tiny hinged inner compartment with complete set of TEN weights. Oval tin case is a bit rough, but it has an interesting gold Stencilled border and center EAGLE Design $13.50
  18. Pine and Maple Wash-Stand, or night table, 34" to top of back board. Side boards missing. Has Dove-tailed drawer and is in nice condition except for a split in the top near the back. Painted black $9.00
  19. We have a pair of these Genuine OLD HITCH-POCK Chairs with roll-backs. Each in perfect tight condition, original cane seats intact. Old black paint. The two $33.75
  20. Two lovely PORCELAINS, each 3 1/2 x 2 1/2", with their original stickers on the backs and rice old Gold-plated Bow-knot Frames with brass enamel backs. Perfect coloring, etc. MADONNA and ANGEL. The pair. $31.50
  21. Grey and white COW Creamer, 9" long, 6" tall $4.75
  22. BANQUET LAMP, 28" to the top of the glass chimney. All brass standard, heavily embossed fount and base border. Has a lovely clear smooth-frosted glass globe with clear-cut Cameo Face Medallions, ribbon bows, flowers, etc. Exceptionally handsome. Hand polished, not electrified. $18.00
  23. Here's a challenge for those who collect POWDER HORNS, have you a GLASS one? 6" long, two-mold. This one came from a Collection and has its old tag that states that it was for Fine Gun Powder as was used on the Pan of old Flint Lock Muskets, as in the Revolutionary Period. $16.50
  24. ARREST OF MAJOR ANDERSON. Published by Haskell & Allen, 81 Hanover St., Boston, Mass. in its original black painted frame. Bright hand-coloring. Some dark staining. $18.00

AND NOW FOR THE THINGS NOT PICTURED!
BARGAINS EVERY ONE!

First we'll describe three of those nice WALNUT HAT-RACKS, accordion type with wood finish fine as found.

25. The largest is the curvy kind, 38 1/2" long. Patent dated 1872. Has 13 pegs, two have porcelain buttons missing. Also needs a very small repair under one peg in the back $6.75
26. The middle sized one is 32" long and Heart shaped. Has 8 porcelain tipped pegs. Perfect. $6.75
27. And the smallest one is 21 1/4" long. Has reeded, straight strips, 10 porcelain tipped pegs $3.37
28. Anyone collect PYROGRAPHY? We have two Boxes, one 6" square, 2 1/2" deep. The other 7" square, 3 1/4" deep. Covered with Burned Wood Cherries. $3.00
29. Or do you need a VACUUM CLEANER? About 47" long? The Reeves Suction Sweeper, Reeves Vacuum Co., Milford, Conn. $12.50
30. Or a POONAH? Someone has enclosed this 12 1/2" square. Painting on Veivet in a wicker frame under glass to preserve it and make a useful tray. Cream colored background with hand-painted colorful Birds and Wild Roses Designs. $7.50
31. Set of six, (three pairs) S. & P. Shakers, 2 1/4" tall. Clear pressed pattern glass with Sterling tops. $3.12
32. Wood and Iron BUGGY WHIP RACK, from an old country Store. Original label "Reed's Pat. Dec. 18, 1883." $3.12
33. Child's MUG, 2 1/4" tall. Palest CRANBERRY Glass, reeded applied handle. Etched "ALIDA" on one side, "1904" on the other. $2.62
34. Or an old Silver WATCH by the AM. Watch Co., Waltham, Mass. Doesn't run but has key. $3.12
35. 13" long, Punch or Soup Ladle. ELKINGTON, rat-tail, Circa 1838. Silver perfect $7.50
36. Beautiful Black Lace MANTILLA (Tricorne Shawl) 11x18 1/2" $13.50
37. WALL Plaque, 5 1/2" Diam. Wedgwood-type, not marked. Sage green background with high white relief center Building and fona' border. "Chamberlain Hotel, Old Point Comfort, Va." $2.62
38. Double Rod Walnut Towel Rack, 21x14" overall. Simple incised carving. Opening for picture, or whatever you choose 17 1/2 x 5 1/2" $3.37
39. Miniature LACY SANDWICH CREAMER. Lee Plate 80 first in second row. Has flake on very bottom, and tiny rim-side flake. $9.00
40. And a deep dish in Lee's LACY SANDWICH "PLAID", 6 1/4" Diam., 1" deep. Has one edge flake $9.37
41. Early BLUE MILK GLASS Sugar Shaker, 4" tall, 2 1/4" Diam. Leafy Scroll Medallions. Proof, but no cover. $8.00

My New England Holiday

By AGNES L. SASSCIER

The memory of my first New England Auction was still very vivid, and my precious "Alcott" duly admired and commented upon by Mr. and Mrs. Van Ness, who were thrilled for me over this latest addition to my collection. I placed the book in the dining room where it could be seen by the various members of the family as they came to visit. Other plans were already in the offing and my third request about to be realized . . . a visit to the famous Wayside Inn, at Sudbury, Mass . . . and for this opportunity I would have traveled many miles.

You are all familiar with Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn", and it had greatly kindled my imagination. This old Inn was formerly called "Red Horse Tavern" before the "Tales" were written, and was the stopping place of many notables of early days. Then in our own day Henry Ford went driving by, and stirred by the historic old Inn planned its purchase and restoration. It is fitting too that he lived many years to enjoy not only Wayside Inn, but other historic places which he so loved. Among these is his famous "Greenfield Village" at Dearborn, Michigan. There, not too many years ago I saw Mr. Ford walking by looking hale, hearty and happy, and no doubt bent on plans for another wonderful restoration.

But I must not forget the "Little Red School House" set up at Wayside, with which "Mary and her Lamb" are associated, nor the fact that Mr. Ford also erected on the grounds the beautiful Martha Mary Chapel, the glorious simplicity of its architecture rising like a poem to the heavens. Mrs. Van Ness told me that many young couples from surrounding New England territory come to be married in this romantic setting. Arrangements could then be made for either a private wedding breakfast or a large reception, at Wayside Inn. What a memory for these young people to carry down the years.

I have never lost a feeling of wonderment as I come upon these old landmarks which have been bequeathed to us as a legacy from those stalwarts of America's young years. We were given a gracious welcome as we stepped into the hallway of this famous old Inn, and as we were to have luncheon in the dining room, we waited until we had finished before looking about. The dining room was most inviting with its beautifully painted white expanse of panelling, its gracious fireplace, and a handsome corner cupboard filled with rare old china. A splendid portrait of George Washington (I believe painted on glass) looked gravely out at us.

Plenty of beauty all about to ensnare one's thoughts, and soon a delicious luncheon was brought on. We were ravenous and did justice to it you may be sure, but the dessert was something to drool over . . . the famous New England Indian Pudding . . . Far more luring than it sounds with a spicy quality to tickle the palate, and leave a lingering memory of its goodness.

From the dining room we went directly into the old parlor around which the "Tales" were written, and in fancy joined the group gathered there so long ago. How well I remembered that room, for about it there was an aura of peace. The beautiful old spinet, on which so many gentle melodies had been played, the fine gateleg table and chairs, the old desk that I caressed with my fingers, to in a measure, lighten the burden of secrets it must hold, secrets of intrigue and romance, which this room had witnessed. The exquisite old lamps, in lieu of candles, the letters and documents and pictures on the walls, the comfortable and spacious fireplace, where many weary travellers had warmed themselves after a tedious journey, revelling in the comfort and tranquility of this Wayside Inn. The chiming of the grandfather clock with its subtle invitation that bedtime had arrived, and a fine night's rest in the offing.

Only a step across the hall to the old tap-room, where, in other days hearty cheer in liquid form was dispensed, warming the inner man and calling forth many tall tales. Here one could rest his pewter mug on the tavern table, or stretch a weary body toward the warm blaze from the settle which still stands by the fireplace. So many of the "comforts" of the old days are to be found in this quaint tap-room. As I sat on the old settle and rested my head against its high back, I could easily have fallen asleep, and while cat-napping have dreamed myself a part of those long gone stirring times. And who could have blamed me, for here is definitely living, authentic background for previous historical facts.

Stepping through the door of the tap-room we entered a delightful small dining room, where in other days guests partook of the fare of the Inn. Another few steps and we were in the old kitchen, where, as was the custom of that day, the help accompanying the travellers were served.

The furniture in either of these rooms would be soul satisfying to collectors of early Americana. In the small private dining room, called the Washington dining room, the furnishings are a trifle more elegant. Wide backed Windsor chairs, an unusual small hutch table and a pewter table service. Another pewter service on the mantel of the large open fireplace. Early sconces hang above, now wired for electricity. However, the fireplace in itself is well worthy of description. Large, open, brick backed, and hearth of warm inviting brick, in which glowing fires had burned cheerily, strong and graceful andirons and fireplace equipment, and as an added cozy note, a fat bellied tea-kettle resting on a trivet.

The furniture in the old kitchen is simpler, lets say—high ladder backed chairs, with woven seats, an extra long trestle table, completely set with wooden ware, and candles. In a high open cupboard are shelves filled with pewter, and a large wheel stands invitingly by for the spinner. There are wooden ware pieces on the side cupboard and all around the beamed ceiling are hanging lanterns to throw off light for the diners as well as for those serving. The floors are wide plain board, and again, the fireplace is one of those inviting large roomy ones, where a grand glowing fire has burned merrily on many occasions. On the floor are iron kettles, large squatty ones, that held ample servings of wholesome fare.

Another long delayed meeting took place at Wayside Inn after five years of anticipation, the meeting with Miss Marion Emerson, Founder and National Historian of Valentine Collectors of America. In its early infancy V. C. of A. held a September meeting at Wayside Inn. I longed to attend that meeting for I was steeped in Valentine lore, and looked eagerly forward to meeting others with the same absorbing interest. However, Fate intervened. The meetings came and went with the same result, but the disappointment of missing the meeting at Wayside Inn was still very keen. In the meantime many of the members corre-

Bettini Catalog--1899

By AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

PART 1

Previously, I had here the Bettini May, 1897, and June, 1898, catalogs. This third and final listing of the Bettini cylinders comprises the contents of the 1899 catalog, including the popular section and again excluding numbers pertaining to orchestra, band and other miscellanea of little importance.

Due to the length of this catalog, only part of its material could be given this month. The remainder is reserved for a future issue.

Trend of the times is to glamorize the 1920 days of prohibition Dixieland and the Charleston. I have hundreds of Dixieland Jazz Band, Charleston records. A little later on radio got its start and the record business fell flat on its face. The greatest musical stars like Ellington, Jelly Roll, Morton, Fats Waller, King Oliver and other great artists appeared on independent labels such as Harmony, Brunswick, Okeh, and many others. I have thousands of these rare items.

FRED VAN EPS

VIII. The Eight Famous Victor Artists

Fred Van Eps continues his reminiscences, with most of this installment being devoted to his experiences as a member of the Eight Famous Victor Artists troupe:

My memory goes back a long way, but sometimes, like everybody's memory, it fails me. I clearly recall the blizzard of 1888—probably the worst storm ever recorded in the Eastern United States—and the trouble I, a boy of about ten, had getting around for several days after the big snowfall.

But up to now I've forgotten to mention that I made a few records under an assumed name. They were made for Pathé, which went in more strongly for aliases than any other record company, and they were duets with an accordion player, Dan Boudini. I was called "Edward Boynton." I notice that here in Roanoke you have an architectural firm by the name of Smithey and Boynton. But I don't have any idea who chose that name of Boynton for me to use when I played with Boudini. We made "Down South" (20433) and "Silver Heels" (20382).

Speaking of names, assumed and real, of course I'm resigned by this time to having the Eps in my name misspelled Epps. And frequently people call me Mr. Epps, seeming to think Van is my middle name. Shakespeare said "What's in a name?" but sometimes having the right name means a lot to a professional musician.

I think I'll talk now about my years as a member of the Eight Famous Victor Artists one of the most interesting periods of my musical life. I joined the troupe late in 1917 or early 1918 when it was still known as the Record Makers. The title identifying the aggregation with the Victor Talking Machine Company didn't come into use until five of the members—Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Albert Campbell, John Meyer and Frank Croxton—signed exclusive Victor contracts in the summer of 1920. The other three—Frank Banta, Monroe Silver and I—continued to free-lance. Some observers said the Eight had the most talent and the most remarkably varied gifts ever packed into one small concert ensemble. At the height of his fame Rudy Vallee remarked that the Eight Famous Victor Artists were his "ideal of show business."

When I joined I took the place of my fellow banjoist, Vess Ossman, who didn't get along with the manager, Burr. As I have already said, that swell fellow Teddy Morse, the song writer, was the pianist, but he gave way in 1918 to young Frank Banta, who had begun working as my accompanist when he was 17. Arthur Collins and Byron Harlan, the famous "coon song" comedians, were also with the troupe, but Collins and Burr never did hit it off, and Burr didn't consider Collins' style of singing well adapted to work with the Peerless Quartet, although Collins had been its baritone since 1907. Their bickering came to a head, and Collins was dropped. John Meyer, who had been singing bass, became the quartet baritone, and Frank Croxton stepped in as basso.

Harlan left with Collins and was succeeded by Monroe Silver, a brilliant comedian who specialized in monologs about "Cohen." He also sang well in a mock-Yiddish style. I used to tell "Mike" Silver (Billy Murray, with whom he roomed on tour, had nicknamed him Mike) that he had ability enough of his own not to need to copy the "Cohen on the Telephone" act which Joe Hayman had made popular, but Mike always insisted on doing a telephone skit in his public appearances.

Before I get down to telling of my travels with the Eight, I'd like to answer a question I am often asked: "How did the Peerless Quartet (Campbell, Burr, Meyer and Croxton) and the Sterling Trio (Campbell, Burr and Meyer) ever find time to rehearse so many numbers when they were free-lancing, and where did they meet to rehearse?" I don't know exactly myself how they found the time except that, as Al Campbell used to say, they rehearsed and recorded in three shifts almost around the clock, but I can tell where they rehearsed. John Meyer had an uncle, John Wilbur, who gave him a florist shop, on Third Avenue, New York. In gratitude to his uncle, John called himself John Wilbur when he first made records but soon changed to his right name. Throughout the years he was with the Peerless, from 1911 through 1925, he continued to operate this shop and he went back to it after he left the quartet. While he was on tour somebody managed it for him. Well, anyway, John had a piano in a back room, and it was there that the members of the troupe used to get together and practice. John Meyer was a very good pianist and he made many of the trio and quartet's arrangements. Sometimes he and Frankie Banta played duets in our concerts.

One thing I learned was, we didn't have to rough it with the Record Makers or the Eight Victor Artists. We weren't allowed to. Burr insisted that we wear evening clothes in giving our performances, and that led the impishly irreverent Mike Silver to dub us "The Pallbearers." After I left, I understand, it was decided to appear in street clothes as a touch of informality designed to loosen up the audience, but we were strictly formal in my day. When we went on our three-month tours throughout the United States and Canada we stayed at the best hotels, and were never allowed to carry baggage. Even if the concert hall or theatre was only a few blocks from our hotel we went in taxis. I remember one time we were in Houston, Texas, and I told a taxi driver I wanted to go to the Municipal Auditorium where we were to appear that night.

"Why," the driver said, the Auditorium is just across the street from this hotel."

"O. K.," I said. "Drive me there!" Although Burr was the organizer and manager of the troupe, its business affairs were in the hands of an Allentown, Pennsylvania, Victor distributor - Philip W. Simon - who maintained a booking office at 1658 Broadway, New York. Simon was a nice fellow whose assistant, L. C. Mountcastle, attended to the actual booking. After Burr's recording career ended he was for a time the program director for the Columbia Broadcasting System and Mountcastle was his right-hand man.

Henry Burr had a genius for making money, but almost as much ability to lose it in fantastic ways. For a year or two he had the Paroquette Record Company, which was a failure. He sank a lot of money in a silver fox farm, and lost even more heavily in a sheet music publishing venture. But he and I did well for several years, manufacturing and selling a banjo I had designed, and of course the Eight was very profitable until the "talkies" came along and, for a long time, killed the appeal of "live" attractions. Too, he was one of the highest paid recording artists.

On one occasion, after the troupe had filled an engagement, the manager of the theater handed me a check. For some reason he had got the impression I was managing the show. I looked at the check and almost fainted. It was for exactly twice as much as the maximum I had imagined Burr could possibly be getting for our services. When I told the other boys, human nature asserted itself and we decided to strike Henry for a raise. At Mike Silver's suggestion, we put on false beards, to make us look like anarchists, and, so to speak, "bearded the lion in his den." Ever afterwards, whenever we decided Hank was becoming too prosperous for his own good and that we should have more money, we put on our beards—some red and some black—and went in for a heart-to-heart talk. I never tried to find out what the other fellows were getting, but it was generally understood that Billy Murray's take was tops. And it should have been. He was not only a marvelous master of ceremonies but also the most popular recording artist this country has ever known.

That business of putting on false facial fungus was the start of the Order of Beards, about which you were telling me. That was after my time, but I got a laugh, Jim, out of your story of how the Eight used to put on those false beards and parade through trains, brandishing hatchets and scaring passengers by pretending to be Russian anarchists. Finally, as you said, Burr decided he wanted to be a member and asked to be allowed to join. The boys kept him waiting in an anteroom for two hours and then Billy Murray came out and showed him a hat into which seven black pellets had been dropped. Every body in the troupe had blackballed Burr! (Mike Silver had slipped off the train at a convenient spot and bought some pieces of licorice that were rolled up into balls.) And, as you say, Hank became so furious the other seven decided in a hurry to let him become a full-fledged member of the Order of Beards.

Burr insisted on paying off in cash on Saturday nights. The boys used to kick about that because they considered the display of so much money an open invitation to a stick-up, but Burr argued that a hotel lobby was a good pay-place and handing out stacks of greenbacks was good business because "it looks prosperous." Then, as you say, someone slipped into Monroe Silver's room in a Columbus, Ohio, hotel, while he was taking a bath and not only stole his week's salary but also took a ring his dead mother had given him. Mike didn't mind the money so much—there would be another pay-day next week—but he did mourn for the ring, which he never recovered. Burr lost a $700 ring in the Hotel Muhlenbach in Kansas City, but later got it back.

Henry and his wife were both fat and heavy eaters. One day down in Texas we watched them packing away a huge meal. Mike remarked: "They're reducing."

"Reducing?" somebody else said incredulously, and Mike replied: "Yes, reducing the food supply!"

I got many a laugh from Billy Murray's ability to make off-the cuff funny remarks. Sometimes Billy talked a stang that was almost a form of shorthand. On one occasion he was telling about somebody buying a good second-hand Cadillac car for a thousand dollars.

"Gee, just think of it!" Billy exclaimed. "A Cad for a thou!"

Al Campbell and Mike Silver liked to roam, after the show, about any city in which we were playing. When they got tired of sightseeing they'd drop into a movie, picking what looked like the worst picture they could find. Then they'd take turns watching and sleeping. One would watch the picture a few minutes while the other slept, then wake up, briefly outline the plot up to then, and go to sleep himself. Maybe they'd watch and sleep through a couple of screenings rather than get up and go to the hotel.

Neither Mike or Al drank, and neither did Billy. Burr had been a heavy drinker as a very young man, but he had sworn off and he never touched a drop when I was with the troupe. I'll bet you didn't know that before he came to New York and began his musical career he was a candy salesman in his native Canada. He must have been a very young salesman, for he was only 20 when he began making Columbia records in 1902.

As for myself, I used to go to the beer-and-beefsteak parties which Victor gave each year for its male artists, but nowadays I don't touch anything alcoholic. Neither do I smoke. A specialist who has performed autopsies tells me that nobody would ever inhale cigarettes if the lungs of dead smokers were put on public display. He says the mass of black tar and other harmful substances revealed by a lung autopsy is really frightening.

In spite of looking, as Billy Murray used to say, as if I don't have a spare pound of flesh on me, I've always been remarkably healthy. I've never been ill except that I once had an infected tooth. Most illness is in the mind. I'm still looking forward to the future and still have a zest for living. Never let yourself feel you're old and washed up or you'll lose your incentive for keeping on. There's always something worth doing around the corner. That's why I've kept up my banjo practice, and why I can truthfully say I'm playing better today, thanks to my change of technique, than I did when I was at the peak of my recording career.

One thing I'm proud of is the fact that I've never had a traffic accident, and I've been driving since 1910. Whenever I'm driving over unfamiliar territory and know I'm going back that same way, I make a point of looking back and seeing the territory unroll behind me. In that way, I remember what it looks like and am not likely to lose my way when I begin the return trip. . . I wish I could have kept my hair as thick and glossy as Al Campbell did. His hair was jet black, and when he died, aged 75, in 1947, there were very few traces of gray.

IX. Van Eps - Burr Corporation

During my years with the Eight, Henry Burr and I formed the Van Eps - Burr Corporation and marketed the Van Eps Recording Banjo, modeled after the one I used in my recording and concert work. There was a popular impression that I used a steel-back banjo, but this one had an aluminum resonator with a sound hole in the head, which was made of calfskin.

When I left the troupe in 1922 I took over the sale of the banjo, and it remained on the market until about 1930, when the depression showed up. By that time recording had become electrified, and the loud volume produced by that type of banjo wasn't needed any more. Better results could be obtained with a solid head. I gave banjo lessons for a time, but as the instrument, which had once been so popular, lost its appeal I went into my present business. I'll tell more about that later. I'm happy to say it has been a great success, and I've made most of my money in it. Luckily, I've done so well that if I should live to be 108 I'll still have more money than I'm likely to spend.

I ceased to consider myself a recording artist after I left the Eight, but it seems I did some recording I've forgotten about. You've mentioned several Edison records, such as "Darkies' Dream" and "Darkies' Awakening" and "The Lonesome Mama Blues" which I made for Edison in 1923, and I even made Edison records of "I'm Sitting On Top of the World" and "Dinah" in 1926. I know I did because you played the records for me, but I don't have any recollection of making them.

And now I believe this would be a good place to insert, for the benefit of HOBBIES readers, some notes I jotted down on March 12, 1935, about the history and development of the five-string banjo. I headed it, "America's Own."

X Van Eps Article On Banjo

Not everyone knows the banjo is a native instrument and the only one developed in this country; and when I say banjo I mean the original form, having five gut strings and played with bare fingers — the only type used up to 30 years ago. The so-called dance era brought into use numerous variations — tenor, plectrums, etc. — all strung with wire and played with some kind of a tool. These were easy to play.

The earliest form of musical instrument was a tree stump hollowed out, with a vibrating string stretched across the top. If you sawed this off and put a handle on it you would have a sort of banjo. Almost from man's first attempt to build an instrument, banjo-shaped affairs were used.

The banjo has been associated with the Negro, and while it is true that the slaves brought it from Africa in the form of the "banya," it took an Irishman, Joe Sweeney, to put it in its present form with its five strings and rim. . . There's a memorial to Sweeney at his home town, Appomattox, Virginia.

No other instrument has a more interesting history. It grew up with the minstrels and you had better try to make a ham sandwich without ham than stage a minstrel show without a banjo. . . Starting about 1885 and lasting about ten years the banjo became a fad and everybody plunked one. The then Prince of Wales, who later became King Edward VII, started the craze in England, and was promptly dubbed "Prince Tum-Tum."

The next stage was that of the college clubs; you need only ask Dad to find out what an institution the Banjo Club was and what it meant to belong to one. The man who graduated from college twenty years ago is still either playing a five-string banjo or longing to hear one played.

WHO MADE HIGHEST TYPE BANJOS?

S. S. Stewart of Philadelphia was a manufacturer who spent his life improving and elevating the banjo. He was tireless in his efforts and intolerant of the scoffers, and told them that at one time the violin was said to be no musical instrument. Stewart said the banjo was limited only by the performer's ability, and time has proved him correct.

Since the symphony orchestra is supposed to contain all musical colors, the time is not far distant when the banjo will be a part of these organizations. You can't get that certain timbre without the combination of catgut and calf skin.

After the before-mentioned banjo craze there was the usual reaction, but when the old-time Edison recording artist, Ruby Brooks, began playing in Tom Gould's cafe, which was a rendezvous for fashionable people, New York society began using banjos as an accompaniment for dancing. Brooks teamed up with Harry Denton, and not to have them at your party was the worst social blunder.

The banjo has been crossed with other fretted instruments. If you put a mandolin neck and strings on a banjo body, it becomes a banjo-mandolin. If you reverse the process and put a banjo neck and strings on a mandolin body it becomes a mandolin-banjo. In 1898 there appeared an automatic banjo housed in a glass case and operated with a perforated paper roll which controlled buttons for stopping the strings and vacuum bellows which operated steel picks. This was a popular piece of saloon furniture.

PROFESSIONAL JEALOUSY

An extremely odd thing about the professional banjo players was their jealousy — not ordinary professional jealousy, but an ACUTE variety. If you were an advanced student and paid for tuition you would not be shown anything if there was danger of your becoming too good. During

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

The Records of Fanny Brice

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

To most Americans the death of Fanny Brice at the age of 59 in 1951 meant the loss of one of their favorite radio comedienne, Baby Snooks. But to the historian of show business, the name Fanny Brice brings to mind the burlesque theatre in the early years of this century, the song "My Man," and above all, the Ziegfeld Follies.

She was born in the early 1890s and got her first taste of show business at the age of fourteen by appearing at all the amateur nights she could find out about in the New York area. Three years later she was a star in the clean burlesque of that period, at which time she came to the attention of Florenz Ziegfeld. Her first appearance in the Follies (1910 edition) at the age of 19 was a turning point in her career. She was given a spot to sing "Lovie Joe" and she stopped the show, being brought back for 12 encores. At this time she was not yet making records, but it is interesting to note that her smash hit was recorded for Victor by the other famous Brice of show business, Elizabeth Brice of Brice and King (Victor 5838).

From then on her name was linked with that of Ziegfeld. She was in every Follies from 1910 to 1923 but one, she appeared in the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, the radio program, Ziegfeld Follies of the Air, and the two Hollywood productions, The Great Ziegfeld and The Ziegfeld Follies. Also she starred in two Follies produced by the Schuberts after Ziegfeld died.

Her first records were made for Columbia in 1916. The first of these appears to be A1973 "I Don't Know Whether to Do It or Not," a comic song about a young lady who can't make up her mind whether or not she should get married. The reverse of this side is another "Yiddish" dialect number by Rhoda Bernard - "Nathan," a song I have recorded by her not only for Columbia, but also for Victor and Pathe. The only other Columbia record I have (or know of) by Fanny Brice is No. A2122 - "If We Could Only Take Her Word." This record is one of her best, possibly because they let her use both sides of the record to sing it. The first side tells of a woman who is talked into buying a hat she really doesn't like, while the second is about a mother who forces other people to listen to her darling child sing. This second side with Miss Brice imitating the little girl's horrible singing of "There's a Little Spark of Love Still Burning" is to my way of thinking a masterpiece of comedy.

It is interesting to note that on A1973 her last name is spelled Bryce instead of Brice. Both of these Columbias are scarce items today and I'm happy to state that I was able to secure copies of both from regular Hobbies advertisers; Denis Reichman of Record Collectors Service was able to supply me with an excellent copy of A1973, while Gertrude Heyman located a good copy of A2122. Neither of the records was available to the public for a very long period as the 1919 Columbia catalog has nothing to offer by her.

In the Follies of 1921 she sang "My Man" which song became identified with her for the rest of her life. At this time Victor signed her up to record six sides which were released on the blue label 45000 series the following year. "My Man" was recorded on November 15, 1921 and announced in the February, 1922, edition of New Victor Records as follows:

45263 Second Hand Rose/My Man (Mon Homme)

Funny Fanny Brice, the big scream of the Ziegfeld Follies, with this record makes her bow as a Victor artist. She has had an interesting career, having begun as a child cleaning up prizes at amateur nights in her native Brooklyn, thence arising, not by easy stages, into the Big Follies and the Victor gallery of celebrities. In "Second Hand Rose," the whimsical story of a girl who wears "reach me downs," she sings a song we have already danced to, some of us, as a Victor fox trot. Her Yiddish accent (notice it) is very fine. "Second Hand Rose" is by Grant Clarke and James F. Hanley. It is one of the twin hits of the "Ziegfeld Follies of 1921," and the other is "My Man," by Channing Pollock and Maurice Yvain. It also has been danced to on Victor records, but never yet sung. It is probably the most popular song in France at this moment. It is a girl's tribute to her man, who "isn't much for looks" and "is no hero out of books" but who is a man nevertheless. This is not a comic song, for all its grotesque manner - it is rather too good for that even if it is only for the moment or so.

That Victor underestimated "My Man" is shown not only by the above copy, but also by the fact that "Second Hand Rose" was made the "A" side. In April the second Brice record was released:

45303 I'm an Indian/O, How I Hate That Fellow Nathan.

"I'm an Indian" sings Fanny Brice. Now we know perfectly well that Fanny Brice is not an Indian, but we let her go ahead with the song - when, among doleful drummings, as much Japanese as Indian, some observations in a tongue never spoken by any Indians we ever met, and a rattle of clever stuff in the orchestra, she is forced to confess that she really, for all her feathers and paint is a "Yiddisher Squaw." I'm an Indian is by Blanche Merrill and Leo Edwards. "Oh, How I Hate That Fellow Nathan." is by Lew Brown and Albert Von Tilzer. In this song Miss Brice is a Yiddisher spinster - all on account of Nathan. She gets so emphatic over it she stops her singing and proceeds to pan Nathan in good spoken prose. The moral of the number is, that a man in the arms is worth three on the road. The musical parts of the record are in fox trot time, and the spoken ones in pretty vigorous Brooklyn Yiddisher style.

The last of her acoustically recorded discs was announced in the October, 1922, issue:

45323 Becky is Back in the Ballet/The Sheik of Avenue B.

Fanny Brice is spokeswoman in these records for polyglot lower New York. "Becky" describes the adventures of a young ballerina. The tune is a mixture of the Irish Waltz with obvious Spanish and other racial ingraftings. Becky demonstrates to music from Leo Delibes. The song is by Blanche Merrill and Leo Edwards. "The Sheik of Avenue B" is by Kalmor, Ruby, Friend and Downing. It is another humorous study of East Side Life, not too subtly drawn for popular approval. The melody has a good, catchy fox trot swing to it. The Sheik is a gentleman who has come into the public eye, and into public envy, by purchasing a second hand flivver and thereby, it would seem, attracting around him a substantial harem.

Fanny Brice next succumbed to recording after she appeared in her first talking picture in 1928. "The Jazz Singer" with Al Jolson had been such an unbelievable success that Warner Brothers hastened to sign up Fanny Brice to appear in the movie "My Man" which had a script in which, as might be expected, Fanny Brice was maltreated by her man. She made electrical recordings of most of the main songs from the film for Victor. The first of these was No. 21168 which coupled "My Man" with "The Song of the Sewing Machine." It is interesting to note that two very different versions of "My Man" were issued with this number. One of these, stamped II in the matrix consists of one verse, a first vocal chorus, and a second chorus which is partially instrumental. The second version, stamped 12 in the matrix, consists only of one verse and one chorus, both done in a very emotional manner. I was lucky to pick up a superb copy of this second version, autographed in white ink by Fanny Brice, from the St. Louis dealer, Oliver Johnson.

Two other songs from this picture were released on Victor 21815 - "If You Want The Rainbow (You Must Have The Rain)" and the excellent "I'd Rather Be Blue." In the mid twenties she was well known in vaudeville for her impersonation of "Mrs. Cohen at the Beach" which she did in two parts on Victor 21211. Two years later, in 1930, she made her last record for Victor, No. 22310, which included two songs from her United Artists picture "Be Yourself" - "Cooking Breakfast for the One I Love" and "When a Woman Loves a Man."

In the thirties and forties she became known to the public as Baby Snooks and she recorded a children's album for Capitol in the late forties which is still available. In 78 rpm form it is No. DC 3081 and consists of three ten inch records in which Baby Snooks Learns to Tell the Truth, Learns to be Good, Learns to be Clean, Learns Table Manners, Learns about Crossing Streets, and Learns to be Kind to Animals.

In the post war days the now defunct Biltmore Record Company reissued her 1921 version of "My Man." And a few years ago RCA Victor issued this 1921 version again in its "Old Curiosity Shop" album. But in the last few months Victor has reissued five more of her recordings on its Label "X" including the following "When a Woman Loves a Man," "I'd Rather Be Blue," "Cooking Breakfast For the One You Love," "Second Hand Rose," and "If You Want the Rainbow."

A NOTICE TO ALL COLLECTORS OF CYLINDER RECORDINGS:

For a considerable amount of time now Duane Deakins and Tom Grattelo on the West Coast have been engaged in the Herculean task of trying to compile a complete list of all the cylinder records issued in this country. The first part (Edison 4 minute wax amberol records - popular series) has now been completed and indexed and should be available this Summer to all those who are interested. Duane Deakins (1057 Paloma St., Stockton 4, Calif.) would be interested in hearing from all collectors and dealers who would be interested in subscribing to this series so that he can have some idea of how many copies to have printed. They are now engaged in completing the regular Blue amberol series and are lacking information on Numbers 2960, 3210, 3743, 4791 and 4819. They have information on all of the Edison 2 min. wax gold moulded records from 8000 to 10575 except No. 8002. If anyone can supply information on any of these numbers would you please write Dr. Deakins at the above address. I feel that this is a most important undertaking and that they should be assisted by collectors as far as possible.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

the first days of the phonograph the banjo was about the only instrument that recorded well and was used extensively. Violin records were out of the question - the sound went in so sweetly and came out so sour! George L. Lansing, a well known banjoist of Boston, wrote "The Darkies' Dream" as a solo and it became such a hit that nearly all the bands in the country played it.

Now let's tell our right names and have an understanding as to just what a banjo is:

It's an instrument with five strings (four long, one short) and not what you have heard in the dance orchestras. Those steel strings instruments played with picks or plectrums I just can't call musical instruments, but they filled a gap in the dance orchestras of the '20's. They were a part of the rhythm section and supposed to add to the band. Harry Reser, I think, was, and is, the best player of the so-called tenor banjo. During the several years following World War I more tenor banjos were made and sold than any other music-making tool. Since then the tenor banjo has largely given way to the superior tone of the guitar.

THE NATIONAL INSTRUMENT
Practically everyone knows that the Stars and Stripes is our national emblem. Almost every moron knows the goldenrod is our national flower, but if you were to walk up the street and ask the first six men you met what our national instrument is you would probably get little information. If, after you told them what it is you asked what a banjo really is, you would be apt to get much less information.

Scotland has its bagpipe; Italy the violin, and so on down the line. So it is high time everyone knew our national musical instrument, the only one developed in the United States, is the banjo - especially so since it has had the most interesting career of any.

The foregoing was written more than 20 years ago when the banjo was near its lowest ebb. During the past year there have been gratifying signs of a revival of interest in the orthodox five-string variety, as was evidenced last summer when the August 15 issue of LIFE contained an article on "The Banjo Boom." The article didn't mention a fellow named Fred Van Eps, who has probably been actively booming the banjo longer than anyone else now alive. But, Jim, you took care of that to some extent by writing a reply that appeared in the September 5 issue. You say they cut your letter of more than a page down to five lines - but, at any rate, it let LIFE'S readers know that I am still living and playing the time-honored five-string banjo!

A "Limited Edition" Record By Edith Helena and Domenico Russo

By JIM WALSH

When I attended the John Bieling Day Memorial observance at Garden City, New York, in September, 1948, I met a charming lady who had won world-wide fame as the operatic soprano, Edith Helena. As one of the organizers of the party I was so busy with many duties that I had less opportunity to talk with Madame Helena than I liked, but I still hope to have the happiness of meeting her again.

Meanwhile, I was recently overjoyed to receive an autographed copy of a ten-inch long-play record constituting a recital by Edith Helena and her late husband, Domenico Russo, a noted Italian tenor of the past generation, who was born in 1874 and died in 1932. The record is, without exaggeration, a limited editions production because the pressing has been restricted to 100 copies—which means it undoubtedly will become a choice collector's item. It is obtainable for $5, postpaid, from Arthur E. Knight, 81 Edgewood Avenue, Cranston 5, Rhode Island, a gifted young pianist and authority on operatic and concert recordings, who frequently contributes to that fascinating English publication, The Record Collector.

Included in the two faces of the long-player are three solos by Russo, which were made in 1907 and 1911, but have never hitherto been published; re-recordings of 4 numbers sung by Madame Helena from 1903 to 1923; three songs electrically recorded by her for private use from 1953 to 1955, and a spoken introduction in which the wonderful little lady of almost 80 graciously expresses her pleasure at authorizing the issuance of her beloved husband's legendary recordings. Mr. Knight furnishes the piano accompaniment for the electrically recorded solos.

Despite the technical defects, such as fairly high surface noise and occasional pitch wavers in the old records' piano background, this LP is a joy to hear in well nigh its entirety. My one disappointment was in the copying of the 1923 Edison Diamond Disc originally issued as "Novelty Imitation Medley," and containing Madame Helena's famous imitation of a violin playing "Kiss Me Again," and her singing of "The Last Rose of Summer" in which she introduces an amazing high note of F above high C. This record is more "forward" and "realistic" than any other of the acoustically recorded numbers, but the tone is rather coarse and the scratch seems more pronounced than when the Edison record is played on a New Edison phonograph. However, I have never yet heard dubbings of Diamond Discs that seemed entirely satisfactory, so there is no wonder that to my ears this one falls somewhat short.

The Russo numbers are heard first on side one. They include "La donna é mobile," from "Rigoletto," which the tenor sings with the proper rollicking abandon and gusto. It is very well recorded by 1907 standards. To my perception the best of the Russo records is the second, "O Paradiso," in which the beauty and passion of his voice are genuinely thrilling. I wonder how many other hearers will find a resemblance, as I thought I did, between his voice and that of another great Italian singer, Giovanni Zenatello. Tosti's "Ideale," a song for which I have never especially cared, is sung extremely well with consummate mastery of the melodic line. These last two numbers were recorded in 1911.

The remainder of the first side contains the brief commentary by Madame Helena and her charming singing of "I Love You Truly." It would be impossible to make the average listener who knew nothing of the singer believe that the artist wasn't a joyous love-struck girl in her teens or early twenties rather than a woman of mature years.

The second side begins with the oldest record of the lot, a 1903 recording of Arditi's "Se Seran Rose," with some fine display work. It is followed by "Ah, fors' è lui" from "Traviata," recorded by the soprano in Paris in 1905 and considered by Mr. Knight to be the best existing recording of her voice. Then come the two Diamond Disc dubbings, followed by what, to this listener, is the best part of the record—Madame Helena's electrical recordings of "Comin' Through the Rye" (including what surely must be one of the most seemingly carefree and enchanting laughs ever imprisoned in a "platter") and Massenet's "Elegie," in which the tone is lovely throughout, in keeping with the hauntingly beautiful melody. It was a fine touch of art to bring the recital to a close with two numbers of such contrasting but permanent appeal.

Everyone who admires and loves Edith Helena and every connoisseur of opera who would like to hear the recorded tones of Domenico Russo should immediately order Dom-Art Record 1001-A from Arthur Knight before the supply is exhausted. It is richly worth its $5 price.

Correction and Announcements

Through a mistake, the price of John R. Bennett's booklet "Voices of the Past" Part I, which I reviewed in December, was given me as 65 cents. In reality it should have been 80 cents — at that a low price for this very worthwhile catalog of early HMV vocal recordings.

Mr. Bennett writes me that: "... Part II is due to appear soon. There will be six parts in all, of this first Volume of English recordings. One of these days the Fonotopia Volume II will appear."

I repeat the address where John R. Bennett's "Voices of the Past" Part I may be obtained: The Oakwood Press, Bucklands, Tandridge Lane, Lingfield, Surrey, Great Britain.

The unexpected promise of a second Fonotopia catalog is good news indeed, and to Mr. Bennett go our sincere thanks for his untiring efforts in the field of historical recordings.

Duane D. Deakins, M.D., of 1057 Paloma Street, Stockton 4, Calif., has written me concerning a project upon which he and a fellow collector are engaged. Here is Dr. Duane's letter in part:

"... We are working on a comprehensive listing of all of the cylinder records made in this country. We have begun with the Edison cylinders and are planning to complete the list of them before concentrating on the Columbia, Indestructible, U.S. Everlasting, etc. To date there are only eight or nine numbers missing in our list of domestic Amberols and only about a dozen in the Blue Amberols below the number 4850. The list of concert records was of course fairly easy to complete. For the Edison Standard records we have only about ten unidentified numbers in the 8000s, 9000s, and 10,000s. Below 8000 there are of course many gaps. When each list (Edison Amberol, Edison Standard, Columbia two minute wax, etc.) is completed we plan to publish it. The records will be indexed by artist and by title and approximate dates of release will be included.

"My purpose in writing to you is two-fold: First I am wondering if perhaps you have any Edison catalogs that you would consider lending to me. Particularly needed is a 1901 and an 1898 or earlier and also any Blue Amberol supplements listing records numbered 4850 or higher. ... Second ... would it be possible for you to mention this project in your HOBBIES articles. By so doing we may be able to receive some help from other collectors and also avoid possible duplication of effort in case someone else is engaged in the same work."

If you have any catalogs which fall under the categories mentioned by Dr. Deakins, please get in touch with him. By lending Dr. Deakins your assistance you will be doing your share in illuminating some of the still obscure facets of our hobby.

RICCARDO STRACCIARI: 1875-1955

Recently this department carried an appeal for financial assistance to Riccardo Stracciari. Now the need is for a prayer, for he passed away in Rome, Italy, on October 10, 1955. The great baritone was eighty years old and, reportedly, for years suffered from an acute kidney ailment.

The loss is deeply felt, but the consolation of having his glorious recordings alleviate the sorrow brought on by his death.

Roland Gelatt Writes Superb History Of "The Fabulous Phonograph"

By JIM WALSH

As related in HOBBIES for August, 1952, Thomas A. Edison invented the phonograph 78 years ago, when he astonished a mechanic, John Kruesi, by shouting "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into a funnel and having the sound squeakily repeated by the instrument which had indented it on tinfoil. During those 78 years there has been no satisfactory history of the phonograph, but now one has come along — "The Fabulous Phonograph," written by Roland Gelatt, New York editor of High Fidelity, and published by Lippincott at $4.95. The book contains 320 pages of text and a splendid photograph section. It is remarkably accurate and as comprehensive as a book could be and still be kept of reasonable size.

Specialists of course will fancy they have detected errors, and there are some. Readers of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" will be specially interested to know that the singer identified as Charles Harrison in a photo of the Crescent Trio making a Victor record is really Charles Hart. As most HOBBIES readers know, Charlie Harrison is still active as a music teacher, while Charles Hart is appearing in a Broadway mystery production written by Agatha Christie, "The Witness for the Prosecution."

Here are some other minor flaws, pointed out through a sense of duty, in what is otherwise a splendid work of research and scholarship:

Gelatt says Columbia "for some obscure reason" quit making double-faced discs after bringing out a few in 1904. Actually, Columbia quit because a German firm, the International Talking Machine Company, which made Odeon records and was first to introduce the two-side disc, claimed world patents and sued Columbia for infringement. Columbia revived the double-faced record in the fall of 1908 after litigation ceased. I think there also should have been some mention of the fact that the first Columbia discs issued in 1902 were acquired from the Globe Record Company, and that some of the records read, "Climax Record, made for the Columbia Phonograph Co., by G. R. Co." Another omission is the lack of mention of disc firms that stayed in business for several years until Victor and Columbia ousted them after winning patent suits in 1907. These included Leeds and Catlin, Talk-o-Phone, International, American, Duplex and others.

The book gives the impression that Edison never used electrical recording except for needle-cut records that stayed on sale only ten weeks, but the Edison Diamond Discs from 1927 to 1929 were electric. Insufficient attention also is given to Edison's part in making period model phonographs popular. October, 1914, is given as the date of Sonora's going into the phonograph business, but Sonora machines, with the "Clear as a Bell" trademark, and hill-and-dale Sonora records, were on sale in 1910.

I was surprised to see it asserted that Russell Hunting, "The Original Michael Casey" and one "Pat Brady" were the most popular recording artists of the 1890's. Hunting's popularity until he went to England in 1899 is undoubted, but after a lifetime of research I had never before even heard of Brady. No pioneer recording artist or phonograph company executive has ever mentioned to me this obscure recorder of Irish monologues, who worked for the Ohio Phonograph Company, when the American talking machine business was split up into Statewide segments. Such pioneer stalwarts as Len Spencer, Ada Jones, Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Harry Macdonough, Vess L. Ossman and Murry K. Hill are mentioned, but Billy Murray and Henry Burr, top performers from the standpoint of popularity, are overlooked. However, as I said, these are minor flaws, immeasurably overbalanced by the book's great merits.

Particularly worthy of praise is Roland Gelatt's impartial and objective attitude. He praises for Victor for the prestige it gave the phonograph by so persistently recording and advertising records by famous opera stars such as Caruso, and by renowned instrumentalists, but the company is shown to have been bogged down by self-satisfaction and unprogressive policies in the early 1920's. Gelatt also shows how the "hard-headed, business man" attitude of Columbia's first president, Edward Easton, who didn't believe that classi-

Antique Automobiles

The Antique Automobile Club of America had a tent for exhibition purposes at the Fair in Springfield, Ill. last August, and some 189 antique automobiles ran around the State Fair track, according to a story by Louise Hutchinson in The Chicago Tribune.

On exhibition was a 1935 Duesenberg, owned by R. Disney Dickens of Chicago that made it to Springfield running 70 miles an hour. It cost $17,000 new and has 320 horsepower with a supercharger.

A 1910 Hupmobile with mirror finish brass fittings, an oval shaped gas tank at the rear, and a red body is owned by Leroy Kurtzeborn of Chicago.

A 1920 Ford owned by Robert Syverson of Des Plaines, Ill., had painted non-glare headlights, which were then called eyelids.

An 1899 Locomobile, owned by Robert L. Lyons of Chicago, is one of the oldest cars on exhibit. A unique one is a 1906 two cylinder Sears car, which sold through the mail order catalogue. Its original price was $370 without top and fenders, or $395 with them. It was built to look like a buggy for appeal to rural folks. This one is owned by Dwight E. Le Master of Chillicothe, Ill.

A 1920 Minerva, Belgian built car, which originally sold for $20,000, is owned by H. W. Buecker of Springfield. And a Rambler, circa 1902, owned by Richard A. Cox of Streator, Illinois, was the 1954 show grand champion.

A 1912 Kimball electric, only electric automobile shown, has leather fenders and hard rubber tires. It is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hill of Ottawa, Ill.

Walter Bittner, of Bloomington, co-chairman of the antique car ad-cal records could be made to pay, made Columbia trail far behind Victor in prestige and sales. While unqualifiedly asserting that Edison phonographs and Diamond Disc records were far better than anything else of their time, Gelatt has some harsh words to say about Thomas A. Edison's bull-headed business methods and frequent miscasting of artists in songs unsuited to them.

For the first time the complicated inter-relationship of Berliner, Improve, Victor and Zon-o-Phone are made clear. I could go and on in praise of this book, but it should be sufficient to say that Roland Gelatt has told the story of the phonograph "from tinfoil to high fidelity" and done it superbly. Every record collector should own a copy.

visory committee and owner of 10 vintage autos, who houses his old ones in garages and lets his modern car take the weather, put romance into every old car he talked about. He is a real old car enthusiast and seems to know them from 1 to Izzard. He believes electric cars do not appeal widely to collectors because of their limited mileage. He told of a 1918 Milburn which he sold for $550. It had 16 batteries but would only take him about 25 miles without a recharge.

CIRCUSIANA

By DANA STEVENS

Q: How long has Merle Evans directed the Ringling Bros. Circus band?

A: For over 30 years. Shortly after the first of the year, Mr. Evans announced his resignation from this show. He will be associated with an indoor circus.

Q: Was it the Ringling show that once had a small boy and a xylophone as one of their feature attractions several years ago?

A: Right you are. In 1953, top billing of the 83rd annual edition of the Ringling Bros. Circus was given to Mr. Mistin, Jr., a Belgian boy of five years of age. He played the xylophone with an unusual amount of skill. He was billed as the Child Wonder of the World.

Q: Are circus elephants African or Asian?

A: Circus elephants today, almost without exception, come from India. The African elephants are larger in size but much more difficult to handle. They have been used most generally for display purposes only with American circuses.

Q: How is an elephant able to handle his trunk so well?

A: Probably because of the great mass of muscles in it. It is said that Cuvier, the great French naturalist, once tried to count these muscles. After counting 20,000 he quit although not quite half through.

Q: Has the Ringling Bros. Circus always wintered in Florida?

A: No. The Ringling show officially moved its winter quarters from Bridgeport, Conn., to Sarasota, Florida, in 1927. They have been in Sarasota ever since.

Q: Who holds the record for being the smallest human ever to travel with a circus?

A: According to my records, the smallest person who ever exhibited herself was Lucia Zarate, the Mexican Lilliputian. When she was twelve years old, she weighed only five pounds and was 20 inches high. She showed with Admiral Dot in the old Keith Museum in Boston. She died of pneumonia in 1889 as a result of exposure while on a stalled train in a blizzard in the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Q: Are the lions and tigers with a circus really as mean as they sound when they roar and scream in the ring?

A: Any wild animal is dangerous, but most animal trainers insist that often the noisiest lions and tigers, much like barking dogs, are the least dangerous. The ones they watch most carefully are the sullen, quiet beasts.

Q: Where is the "Sailor Circus" located?

A: In Sarasota, Florida. It is sponsored by Sarasota High School. It was started several years ago by Bill Rutland, director of physical education at the high school.

Q: How big was Gargantua, the gorilla of the Ringling show?

A: When he was fifteen years old, Gargantua was said to have weighed over 550 pounds. He stood 5 feet 7½ inches tall and had an arm stretch of over 9 feet. He was over a yard broad at his chest. It was once proved that he had the strength of over twenty men when he jerked 17 men off their feet with one hand in a tug of war. I have watched him twist tires into figure eights as easily as you and I might twist rubber bands.

Q: Have circuses always had clowns?

A: It seems so. Clowns, so integral a part of the modern circus, started as strolling entertainers in the early days of the colonies. They often alternated their funny antics with exhibitions of rope and sword dancing. An early troupe appeared in the outskirts of Philadelphia in 1724 with the first recorded clown named Pickle Herring.

Q: In circus language what is "rat" paper?

A: "Rat Paper" or "rat bills" were circus posters that were posted by advance agents and which belittled and insulted rival shows. They now belong to a past era of circusdom.

Q: When was the disastrous Ringling fire and where?

A: In July of 1944 in Hartford, Connecticut. The fire struck during the Thursday matinee at the finish of the Alfred Court cat act.

Q: Why are circus tents round?

A: A round tent proved itself early in circus history as having greater mobility and certainly was and is of greater convenience for the spectator. The round tent is essentially an American development.

Q: What was the essential difference between early English circuses and early American shows?

A: The difference was mainly in the programming. English circuses laid great emphasis on equestrian art, pantomimes and other theatrical performances. Early American shows developed along somewhat different lines, particularly in stressing a series of spectacular feats. Theatrical features were omitted.

Q: I've heard it said that circus owners were once called a certain name. Is this true?

A: Circus owners have been called many names in their time. I think you are referring to the name "Governors." Circus proprietors traditionally called this name.

Q: My grandfather, who lived in Denver all his life, used to tell me stories about a man he knew who owned one in that city. Do you have any idea who he meant?

A: I'm quite sure it must have been Jeremiah Joseph Mugivan. He lived from 1871 to 1930 and started out of Denver as a ticket seller. He had his own 10-car circus in 1904. He acquired properties thick and fast and by 1929 owned five fully equipped circuses and had titles to others. It was he who organized the American Circus Company.

Q: When did the American circus first have a trapeze?

A: The trapeze was introduced to the circus in America by Francois Siegrist at Franconi's Hippodrome in New York in 1853.

Q: Are giraffes fairly recent additions to circus menageries?

A: No. Circus owners Rufus Welch and Caleb Weeks brought a giraffe to America in 1837 to exhibit with their show.

Q: Is there a Hagan-Wallace Circus?

A: There certainly was, although I'm not certain if it is still on the road today. This show was built in the winter of 1950-51 in Deland, Florida, by Mr. Duggan, who operated a circus for a short time in the thirties.

Ecclesiastical Rings

From Finger-Ring Lore, by William Jones, F. S. A., published by Chatto & Windus, London. (Continued)

In addition to these examples are two other French Episcopal rings. One is that of Gerard, Bishop of Limoges, who died in 1022. Didron thus describes it: 'Cet anneau est en or massif; il pese 14 gram. 193 m.; aucune pierrerie ne le decore. La tete de l'anneau, ou chaton, est formée de quatre fleurs trilobées opposées par la base sur lesquelles courent de légers filets d'email bleu.'

One of four rings of St. Eloy (6th century), preserved before the Revolution 1793 in the treasury of the church at Noyon, in France, was inscribed:

Annulus Eligii fuit aureus
iste beati,
Quo Christo sanctam desponsavit Godebertam.

(This gold ring of the ever-blessed St. Eloy was that with which he married St. Godiberte to Christ).

It was the custom in former ages for the high dignitaries of the Church at the time of their elevation to episcopal rank, to celebrate such event with pompous ceremonies. We find recorded, among others, the marriage of prelates especially in Italy. In 1519, Antonio Pucci was elected Bishop of Pistoja, and made his solemn entrée with a brilliant cortège. On reaching a nunnery called San Pier Maggiore, he descended from his horse, says Michel-Ange Salvi, and 'entered the church, which was richly decorated. After praying, he went towards the wall which separated the church from the convent, where an opening had been made, and, in an apartment there, wedded the abbess, placing on her finger a sumptuous ring. After this he went to the cathedral, and with various ceremonies was inducted into his bishopric.'

At Florence, when an archbishop was elected, he proceeded to a convent dedicated to St. Peter, and was married to the abbess. A platform was erected, surmounted by a rich baldequin, near the high altar; a golden ring was brought to the prelate, which he placed on the finger of the abbess, whose hand was sustained by the oldest priest of the parish. The archbishop slept one night at the convent and the next day was enthroned, with great ceremony, in the cathedral.

The same usages were practised at the installation of the archbishops of Milan, the Bishops of Bergamo, Modena, & c.

A curious legend of a ring of espousals received from our Saviour by a pious maiden, is recorded by Nider, in his treatise 'In Formicario,' and is referred to by Kirchmann ('De Annulis'). He writes in praise of celibacy, and describes a certain maiden who, rejecting all earthly loves, is filled with sincere affection for Christ only. After praying for some token of Divine acceptance: 'orti locello quo nunc oculis corporeis visum dir-igo. Et ecce in eodem momento et locello vidit tres or duos circiter vularum amenos flosculos . . . Violas manu collegit propria et conservavit sollicitur, ut exinde amor et spes artius ad suum sponsum grate succrescerent.'

Eleanora, third daughter of John, King of England, on the death of her husband, the Earl of Pembroke, in 1231, in the first transports of her grief, made in public a solemn vow, in presence of Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, that she would never again become a wife, but remain a true spouse of Christ, and received the ring in confirmation, which vows she, however, subsequently broke, to the indignation of a strong party of the laity and clergy of England, by her marriage with Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester. At the head of the clergy was one William de Avendon, a Dominican friar, who quoted a tractate on vows, by one 'Master Peter,' from which it appears that a sacred plighting was considered almost as impassable a barrier as the veil itself, against the marriage of the wearer.

Mary, sixth daughter of Edward I., took the veil at Amesbury, thirteen young ladies being selected as her companion. The spousal rings placed on their fingers were of gold, adorned with a sapphire, and were provided at the expense of the King.

In a very interesting paper by Mr. Harrod, F. S. A., in the 'Archæologia' (vol. x1. part 2) we have particulars of the custom, which prevails

THE STORY OF THE WATCH CHAIN

BY SILVIO A. BEDINI

ON TIME - - -

Sooner or later the collector of watches will become interested in learning how the watch was worn in the various periods of its development. Very little has been published on the subject but it is not our purpose here to rectify this omission, but instead to review briefly the use and development of the watch chain as an item of utility decoration.

According to the history of horology, the watch was the natural development of the reduction of the clock to a portable form as a result of the invention of the mainspring. The first portable watches were worn about the neck upon a chain. As the fashion in men's clothing changed, and as technical developments in watchmaking followed, the watch became smaller and smaller, and the manner in which it was worn changed also. Small portable clock-watches had come into use by at least the beginning of the 16th Century in various parts of Europe, and during the course of the next century they were worn upon the person.

From the neck, the watch went next into the purse and then into the pocket. After the watch went into the pocket, the use of a watch chain as we know it became necessary.

Apparently the first such chains were "fob" chains. It has been suggested by various writers on the subject that the word "fob" was derived from "fuppe," the German word meaning small pocket. A clasp was used to attach the fob chain to the watch bow, and the remainder of the short chain dangled outside the pocket as an easy appliance for taking out the watch when it was needed. Usually a decorative watch key for winding the watch, or a personal seal, was attached to the visible end of the chain.

Being concealed, the watch yielded its decoration to the chain, and short fobs were produced in varying degrees of decoration and ostentation.

Perhaps the earliest use of the fob is to be found in Puritan England of the 17th Century. Cromwell disliked ostentation in any form and his influence was felt on the decorative arts in many ways. The furniture and costume of the time reflected the simple puritanical taste. As a matter of course the watch became less decorative and more functional.

Cromwell's own watch is preserved in the British Museum in London and it is considered to be a prime example of simplicity with a minimum of decoration. It is of interest to note that this watch was made to be worn in the pocket, with a light fob chain of silver. The custom of concealing the watch did not persist, however, and it was brought out into view again and it became the object of lavish decoration in the period of the Reformation and later.

It was not until the development of the first thin watch late in the 18th Century by Jean Antoine L'Epine of Paris that the watch went into the pocket to stay. Previous to this time the watch was relatively thick in dimension and uncomfortable to wear.

Late in the 18th Century men's fashions changed once more. The coat became double-breasted and was cut relatively short in the front and was closely buttoned. The waist-coat pockets were no longer easily accessible and the watch had to be disposed of elsewhere upon the person. Accordingly, a small pocket or "fuppe" or "fob pocket" was built into the waist band of the trousers for the express purpose of containing the watch.

One of the most decorative examples of the fob chain of this period is illustrated here from an engraving which appeared in the British Illustrated Magazine of Art in 1853. The chain formed part of a watch made by L'Epine's brother-in-law, Beaumarchais.

The chatelaine is a very familiar souvenir of the same period and fine examples are still to be found. The chatelaine generally consisted of a clasp for attaching to the waist, and several short chains suspended from a decorative shield which concealed the clasp, or hook. To the ends of these chains were attached a variety of useful objects, running the gamut from house keys, scent bottles, thimbles, miniature scissors, ear picks, seals, watch keys, and last but not least—a watch.

The chatelaine had its origin in Roman times and it was probably a survival of an attachment to the leather girdle which survived and changed with every epoch to modern times, when at last it was no longer needed.

The chatelaine made one last great stand with the ladies of the 18th and 19th Centuries. In its last appearance, during the Victorian period, it was generally made with a large hook for attaching it to the waist, and this was concealed with a decorated shield or medallion. The same conglomeration of ladies accessories and tools were suspended from the short chains and encased in elaborate individual cases. A lady's watch was invariably present with its winding key. A chatelaine was a very popular gift for the new bride and the decorative arts and the jeweler's skill were not spared in its design and execution.

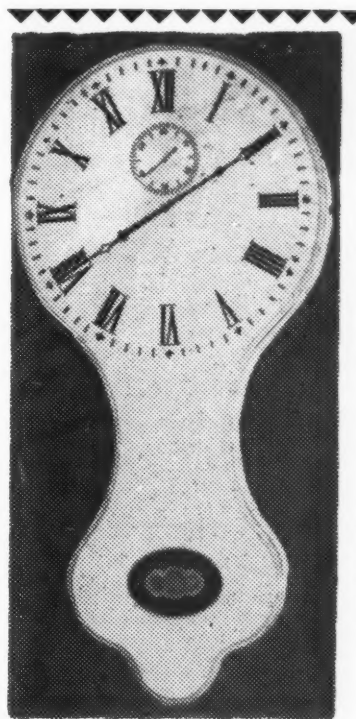

From the chatelaine of household service was derived a chatelaine specifically for the wearing of the watch, which was suspended from the central chain and the other short chains were utilized for winding keys, fobs and seals. An example of this type, made of gilt metal, is illustrated here from the collection of Dr. William Barclay Stephens of Alameda, California. The short fob chain of gold mesh is from the same collection.

Many fine examples of chatelaines and fob chains which are outstanding examples of the jeweler's art are to be found in various museums and private collections throughout the country. We note in particular several magnificent examples which are illustrated in the catalogue of the H. J. Heinz collection of watches in the Carnegie Museum in Pittsburgh. These include a chatelaine of chased gold on grey agate panels of the period of Louis XV of France, an elaborate fob of gold enamel and pearls made by Jeffrys and Jones of London of the late 18th Century, and finally another of brown and white opaque enamel on gold which once belonged to Admiral, Lord Nelson of Trafalgar fame.

After the fashion of the fob chain and chatelaine waned, chiefly as a result of the changes in costume, they were replaced by the linked chain of gold or silver. A clasp at one end was attached to the bow of the watch and the other end was either attached directly to the cloth of the waistcoat, or was pulled through the adjacent buttonhole and was suspended in view with a winding key, fob or seal. This type of chain became generally known as an "Albert" and was named after the Prince Consort of Queen Victoria of England, who popularized the wearing of this accessory.

Although its general form remained more or less the same, there was a variance in thickness of links and in elaboration of the links themselves. As the century advanced, the chain slimmed down in thickness and it became a more conservative adornment. Although the popularity of the wrist watch has curtailed the wearing of the Albert to a considerable

The Bismark Bank

By F. H. GRIFFITH

A mechanical bank that is very much under-rated is our choice to occupy the 44th position in our numerical classification of the mechanical banks. The bank is the Bismark Bank, and along with being a rare interesting item it has a rather fascinating background and origination.

The top mechanical bank designer, Charles A. Bailey, is responsible for the Bismark Bank, and, as is often the case with certain of the banks he designed, there is more to it than just being a child's saving device. Offered as a toy savings bank and definitely sold commercially as such it nevertheless had political significance appropriate to the times.

Bismark was born in 1815 and died in 1898. In 1866 he was made Chancellor of the German Empire and this began a long period of his trying to unify Germany as a world power. In so doing he did many things that reacted directly against the United States. For one thing Bismark impaired the Monroe Doctrine and went so far as to call it an 'international impertinence.' Bismark while posing to be friendly, actually did many things that reacted unfavorably to the United States, covering such things as religion, immigration, colonial expansion, and others. Relations between Germany and the United States after 1880 were affected by German commercial restrictions. For some years one of our main exported items to Germany were various meats. This consisted chiefly of pork and pork products, and in 1883 they prohibited the importing of United States pork into Germany. The possibility of trichinosis was used as an excuse to ban any more U.S. pork and pork products being imported into Germany. So, in any event, it's obvious to see how Bailey associated Bismark with a pig and had Bismark himself popping out of the pig's back. The bank was, of course, first made during the 1883-1884 period. This is definitely substantiated by the Ehrlich's Fashion Magazine, Winter 1884, which pictures the Bismark Bank for sale.

The bank pictured was obtained through the good help of Mr. Edward Rost of St. Louis, Mo. It is in excellent condition and the paint exceptionally good. The pig itself is black and he has a red mouth. The nose, eyes, and hoofs are white, and the lettering of the name is gold. The face of Bismark is flesh color with black eyes and moustache. His jacket is red and the tray is gold.

The bank operates as follows: The figure of Bismark is depressed forward and locks in place by means of a spring action in the tail. With the figure of Bismark thus inside the pig's body a coin slot appears just above the tail in the pig's back. This coin slot design is similar to the tail of the goat on the Germania Exchange Bank, also made by Bailey. A coin is put in the slot and then the tail is pressed. The figure of Bismark pops from the pig's back as shown and the coin is deposited in the bank. It is not a well designed piece from the standpoint of being strictly a savings bank since the coins themselves when inside the bank actually interfere with the mechanism. This, of course, doesn't detract but actually adds to the interest of the piece. Of further interest is the spring inside the pig that accentuates the Bismark's bust. It is necessary for this spring to have three extra twists put into it when placed in the bank so it will operate properly. If this is not done the tray catches in the spring and interferes with the action.

A number of Bismark Banks are around, but to the best of the writer's knowledge there are only about four or five actual original specimens that exist in present collections today. It is a very difficult bank to find as an original specimen. Unfortunately a number of years ago a limited number of this bank were recast and sold as originals. They are very easy to recognize, however. The casting of the pig is exceptionally heavy and painted a light cream color. The figure of Bismark is quite crude and not like the fine work of the Bailey original. The tail of the pig operates differently, by lifting it instead of pressing it down. The loop of the tail is down instead of up as in the original. The spring mechanism is also differently arranged inside the recast specimen. To repeat, the recast of this bank is very easily recognized and it isn't even like the original except in a rough general appearance. These recasts made some years ago in no way affect the fine rarity and value of an original specimen.

NEW MECHANICAL BANK BOOKLET

F. H. Griffith, who conducts the Mechanical Bank Department for HOBBIES Magazine, has prepared a new booklet on mechanical banks. The booklet comprises a numbered and alphabetically arranged listing of all authentic mechanical banks, and each is graded under a new type system which affords a greater degree of accuracy and permanency.

The booklet is divided into seven parts which include the American made mechanical banks, foreign made mechanical banks, semi-mechanical banks, mechanical bank patterns, uncertain and recast mechanical banks, fake mechanical banks, and variations.

It is necessary to charge a nominal price of $2 for the booklet to cover the cost of printing, publication, and other incidentals. To obtain the booklet write to Mr. F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump and Supply Company, Pittsburgh 3, Pa.

The booklet will be helpful to both collector and dealer in evaluating their mechanical banks. R. P.

OLD SILVER

"Matthew, Mark, Luke and John Bless the bed that I lie on."

By POLLY FABEL

Both in the East and Europe, spoons have had a place since time immemorial; and for many hundreds of years throughout the world, the most lavish fancies of the engravers art have been employed in this decoration. The date when spoons were first invented has long been a question and still remains unanswered. History has recorded the period in which many household utensils made their appearance in a more can be thrown on the invention of or less finished shape, but no light these indispensable articles. Probably our prehistoric ancestors employed shells first and later some quick witted, wild man may have conceived the idea of hollowing a bowl out of a bit of wood long enough to form a rude handle as well. Some fine specimens made by the American Indians, of hand carved wood, are still to be found. They are rare and beautiful pieces of fine, primitive art.

Early in the records of Christianity in Europe, spoons became the usual present bestowed by persons at the baptism of children for whom they stood sponsors. A spoon made expressly for this purpose had, on the handle, the figure of one of the Apostles or Evangelists, from which custom, of course, comes the name "Apostle spoons" as shown in illustration No. 1. A wealthy godfather or godmother would give spoons enough to represent the entire band of Disciples, each spoon ornamented with a silver or gold effigy. Sponsors unable to treat their spiritual children to such expensive gifts, contented themselves with offering four spoons bearing the figures of the Four Gospel writers in the order in which their names are mentioned in a child's prayer of the Middle Ages:

"Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, Bless the bed that I lie on."

All sorts of odd legends and proverbs grew up in those days about these most necessary articles, some of which are familiar adages even down to our generation, like the hackneyed saying in regard to a lucky man that "he was born with a silver spoon in his mouth."

In a volume of memoirs of one of the ladies attached to the court of Anne of Austria, an incident is recorded that fits in with my subject and gives a vivid idea how completely the people of that era believed in the difference between monarch and ordinary mortals. During one of the civil wars which desolated France during the childhood of Louis XIV, and the regency of his mother; with the hated Cardinal Mazarin for her counselor; the queen and court were once obliged to flee from Paris in such haste that there was little time to collect clothing or household utensils. The lady writes to a friend that it would have touched the heart could she have seen how heroically Queen Anne bore her privations; she actually condescended to laugh and treat as a joke the terrible humiliation of having no gold spoon out of which to sip her chocolate—she positively used a silver one for the first time in her royal life.

Spoon collecting, one of the most exciting hobbies of the late eighties, still prevails the country over. Many were brought from abroad, people searching through European cities for quaint and curious devices in spoons to bring home as souvenirs of their journeyings. The shops in the Old World were full of odd patterns characteristic of the places in which they were made, such as in illustrations Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and No. 6. The handle of the spoon usually forms the distinguishing feature, while in the bowl is found the name of the city engraved in odd lettering as the French spoon from Paris in illustration No. 7. Some hobbyists collect only states, some cities, some look for rarer ones which have enamelling in beautiful, soft coloring to enhance further the pattern. They were made in demi size as well as teaspoon size. Sometimes the name

We find on the novelty spoons of Ireland, the shamrock or white clover; which is the national flower of the Emerald Isle. When St. Patrick, the patron saint, first explained the idea of the Trinity to his simple followers, instead of puzzling their brains by a learned dissertation; he stooped and plucked from the green sod, a shamrock with its three small leaves. Holding it up, he bade them there behold one in three. In Scotland, the thistle is the emblem engraved on spoons and in London, they are decorated with the rose, as in illustration No. 8.

In Turkey, horn as well as silver was used, sometimes inlaid with ebony, ivory, mother of pearl and even precious stones. On the Turkish spoon (Continued on page 92)

Museum News

An exhibit on "Great Illustrated Books" was on display at The Metropolitan Museum of Art through November 30. These were from the museum's regular collections. The exhibit contained more than forty rare volumes dating from 1450 to 1600. The earliest book shown was a Netherlandish block book of Biblical pictures. Other firsts were: the first illustrated travel book, first book illustrations printed in Italy and the first printed book illustrating machinery, such as medieval catapults and other siege machinery.

The Art Institute of Chicago has been chosen to organize the 28th Biennale Exhibition of International Art to be held in the U. S. pavilion in Venice next summer. The U. S. pavilion is owned by The Museum of Modern Art, New York, and this is in keeping with their announced policy of asking other U. S. museums to help in organizing future shows.

During November and December a private collection of weapons was shown at the Detroit Historical Museum. All the weapons which represent the Civil War and Revolutionary War as well as Indian weapons, are in usable condition. A 1750 Flintlock rifle is the oldest item in the group and still works. The collection was lent to the museum by Max Schwartz of Wyandotte who has been gathering his collection for the past fifteen years.

Travel Search For Bells

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50

A story about the Meyers personal search for bells, a down-to-earth summary of a fascinating hobby.

Published by

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION

1806 So. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

Many a ship's bell, after an adventurous career, often continues to render service long after the decease of its parent ship. Thus in many villages near the Scottish coast, and in other parts of Great Britain we may find bells used to call the good folk to church that formerly were in service on the sea! Others may be found serving as alarm bells, fire bells, or even factory bells. Some are preserved in Museums as mementos, or serve as memorials similar to that of the R.N.V.R. at Crystal Palace, and those in the headquarters in London of the League of Remembrance.

The bell of H.M.S. "Canterbury" which has been through tempest and battle (the Cruiser of this name was present at Jutland) now rests in the peaceful surroundings of Canterbury Cathedral. An impressive service attended by five thousand seafarers was held in the Cathedral on June 9, 1934, when the bell was presented. Admiral Sir Percy Roys who commanded the "Canterbury" during the first Great War, struck six bells, and the Psalm beginning "They that go down to the sea in ships" was sung, and the famous anthem by Tennyson, "Crossing the Bar" was chanted. Now every morning at 11 o'clock a serving or retired seafarer strikes six-bells on the "Canterbury" bell, thus to remind all seafarers that the longest voyage and the strongest gale come to an end. Also just as the Army has its "Unknown Warrior" so the Navy has a permanent memorial to those who gave their lives.

A bell that had a chequered history is that of the German Cruiser "Emden." This vessel was launched in 1903, and during the Great War did much damage to British and Allied commerce. It was while conveying Australian troops to England that the Australian Cruiser "Sydney" learned that the "Emden" was at Cocos Island and drove her ashore at the North Keeling Island on November 9th, 1914, destroying her with the loss of 230 of her crew. Commander Muller, who was among those saved, and who had put up a gallant defense, was allowed to retain his sword. This was the first actual fighting done by any ship of the Australian Navy, and relics from the "Emden" were distributed in various cities of Australia. The bell, broken and battle scarred, was displayed in the Garden Island Navy Depot, Sydney. In 1932 it mysteriously vanished, but later was discovered buried in Hyde Park, Sydney. For safety it was then placed in the Museum, yet even so was stolen again on April 28th, 1933. Eventually a young German was sentenced to imprisonment on a charge of stealing the bell. After such an adventurous career, this bell was later restored to the German people by the Hon. Stanley Bruce, High Commissioner in London, who made a special journey to Germany for the purpose.

The bell of the German battleship

Bell of the Spanish cruiser, "Don Juan de Austria"

"Hindenburg" sunk at Scapa Flow, was restored to the German Navy. It was carried over by the British Cruiser "Neptune" on August 3rd, 1936, in recognition of the graceful act in restoring the drums of the Gordon Highlanders.

Preserved in the Mission Inn Museum, California, is the bell from the Cruiser "Don Juan de Austria" inscribed with that name and the words "Crucero 1889" and "Caraca." This cruiser was one of the Spanish Squadron captured in Manila Bay on May 1st, 1898, by Admiral Dewey in the Spanish-American war. With other ships, this cruiser was burned after the battle, and the Philippine Islands became a U. S. possession.

The historic "Lutine Bell" at Lloyd's had many vicissitudes. It began life as a ship bell of the French Frigate "La Lutine," subsequently captured by Admiral Duncan. In October 1799, the "Lutine" was wrecked at the entrance to the Zuyder Zee while carrying specie from England. Lloyd's eventually obtained salvage rights, and in 1858, the bell was recovered. Since then it has been preserved at Lloyd's, and is now rung to announce the arrival of a vessel that is overdue or presumed lost.

At the Baltic Mercantile and Shipping Exchange, London, is preserved a bell inscribed "Ceres 1729" and a brass tablet records "This bell was washed ashore at St. Columb. Porth, Cornwall, September 1929." The chapel of St. Endock, Minver, Cornwall, purchased the bell of the "Immacolata" of Barlette, after it had been driven on the rocks in 1875, and the church at Carbis Bay was formerly served by a ship's bell until able to have a proper ring of church bells. At Jevington, Sussex, one of the bells is inscribed "W. Gyles, Captain; John Wood made me 1698" and this is thought to have been a ship's bell from a wreck, similar to the one at Berwick. There are quite a number of churches in Scotland whose bell was formerly serving on sea. Thus at Durness, Lairg, Sutherland, is one inscribed: "William 1782," and its history says that the ship William ran ashore on the shallow sands at Bakakiel Bay below the ancient parish church of Durness. All the men folk were away from home fishing, so the women helped to remove the sand away from the ship which, when the tide arose, was able to refloat. In return for their services the Captain presented them with the ship's bell.

Until quite recent times the ancient and venerated Cathedral of Iona was served by a ship's bell, while at Stonehaven, Kincardineshire, the bell formerly used was that of a wrecked Norwegian vessel. At Durness an old bell inscribed "Fortune" is used, and at Fetteresso the bell used as the church bell was fished up from the sea in 1847.

TEXTILE ARTS

Decorative Textiles

Not long ago the Illustrated London News reported the crowning discovery made in the tombs of Pazyryk, in the Altai Mountains, of Southern Siberia. These tombs are a series of log-lined chambers, which, for some unexplained reason, had become filled with perpetual ice, with the result that the occupants, their clothes and burial furniture, and the horses which were slaughtered at the burial, had been refrigerated and perfectly preserved. In the fifth tomb or kurgan to be excavated by the Russian archaeologist, S. I. Rudenko, a Persian carpet (six feet by six and one-half feet) was found in early perfect preservation after nearly 2400 years (now thought to be the world's oldest carpet).

Additional information on the excavation reveals the discoveries of other fabrics, most of them brilliantly adorned and in a wonderful state of preservation. They are dated, fairly certainly, to the fifth century B.C., and give detailed information on peoples on southern Siberia—perhaps an eastern extension of the Scythians—of whom so little is known. Archaeologists reported that the occupants of the tombs were of differing physical types, Mongol and Near Eastern; and the objects found with them are likewise mixed—Persian, Chinese and local.

Of unusual interest are the felt tomb hangings and felt appliqued decorations, supposedly chariot platform pieces. There were two decorative pieces depicting a pair of swan-like birds of felt applique to a felt cover. The color of these birds is depicted in black, yellow and rose.

Two colorful, interesting pieces are: A prince's cap with a painted leather cover and turret-like crown; and a woman's felt sock with applique felt designs.

A gay and perfectly-preserved saddle-cloth of applique felt, preserved in the ice for 2400 years aroused considerable interest when it was uncovered by the archaeologists. The scale-like design carries motifs based on stags' antlers. Several similar cloths were uncovered.

Chinese Painting*

By ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

Experts agree that Chinese painting, with a continuing tradition for over 1500 years, is one of the foremost schools of painting in the world. But it must be added that although there are authentic records of many painters and their work from the very earliest years of our era, very few authenticated examples of the work of the famous artists of the various best periods remain. Discoveries made since the beginning of our century have added to this number and it may well be that we may hope for more important discoveries, but conditions in the world today do not contribute much toward such a hope.

One of the chief difficulties in a study of this subject is the lack of documented works upon which to base an understanding of the style and methods of the great masters. Too, it was the custom of Chinese artists to copy the works of earlier artists and to paint over and over variations of famous paintings to suit their fancy. Of course, destruction has also limited the number of old paintings extant today.

It is agreed that painting was the outstanding art of China and for the Chinese it was a branch of handwriting, since a brush was used for both. Although water-colors were used to produce the finished painting, the ink-drawing was generally the basis of the design.

The greatest number of Chinese paintings are on silk, occasionally on paper. They are usually designed as hanging pictures or horizontal scrolls to be kept rolled up. The Chinese unrolled his painting or scroll and read the story from it in a manner similar to our study of landscape wallpaper or continuous mural—a picture with various scenes.

Portrait painting was popular and many artists devoted their time to the painting of national potentates and foreign envoys. Others painted small album pictures and illustrations for books. The landscape, however, seems to have been the subject of greatest interest to the Chinese artist. The Chinese word for landscape, Shan-sui, which literally means mountain and water, accurately describes these landscape paintings. In addition, fairy tales, subjects from the Taoist legends of old, and Buddhist themes were used.

Chinese art differs from that of the West in that it relies to a great extent upon suggestion to set its moods and the Chinese have been able to make even an empty space an important factor in their design in a manner not demonstrated in the art of other countries. Many of the great masters were equally famous as poets and their paintings were poems in paint—the artist achieving in the media of ink and water-color the same mood-effect achieved by the ideas in the poem.

At this time life had a profound spiritual and religious quality for the Chinese and when social and economic conditions forced the artist to fall back upon his inner resources, he created some of the great paintings of this period. In general, then, the Chinese artist devoted his talent to portraying the contemplative life rather than the active.

Although in Chinese literature there are references to paintings as early as several centuries before Christ, the earliest rolls in existence are attributed to Ku K'ai-chih who lived in the fourth century and who is considered among the most famous of the Chinese masters. Many are the recorded stories about this artist who lived at Wusih near Shanghai. (A painting attributed to him entitled "The Admonitions of the Instructress in the Palace" is in the British Museum). Experts dispute the date of this painting and believe it to be a T'ang copy but the design is of the Chin Dynasty. The roll is a piece of silk less than a foot wide and nearly eleven feet long. This has been mellowed by time to a soft brown and the figures are but dimly outlined. The painting portrays the domestic life at one of the emperor's courts and is a succession of scenes rather than a continuous story. Mr. Lawrence Binyon, custodian of the Chinese paintings at the British Museum, writes in "Painting in the Far East" (London, 1913) "for beauty of sweeping yet sensitive lines, few paintings in the world approach it."

A second painting attributed to Ku K'ai-Chih illustrating a poem about a river nymph, is in the Freer Collection in Washington and may well have been done by the artist himself.

In the sixth century Hsieh Ho, a

*It may seem futile to even attempt an overall picture of such an inclusive and important a subject as Chinese Painting in a small space but the subject is so fascinating and letters from many readers have indicated a keen interest in various phases of the Chinese arts.

painter, formulated the famous six canons or rules for painting and these have been much emphasized by later painters. As translated by Herbert A. Giles in his "Introduction to the History of Chinese Pictorial Art," (Shanghai, 1908) they are:

1. Rhythmic vitality
2. Anatomical structure
3. Conformity with nature
4. Suitability of coloring
5. Artistic composition and grouping
6. Copying of classical masterpieces

There has been much discussion as to the meaning of the first tenet but it is believed that it lays emphasis on creative inspiration—the enabling of the artist to produce the movement of life through communion with nature. Giles translates a description of this communion as portrayed by a Chinese artist:

"To gaze upon the clouds of autumn, a soaring exaltation in the soul; to feel the spring breeze stirring, wild exultant thoughts—what is there in the possession of gold and jewels to compare with delights like these? And then to unroll the portfolio and spread the silk, and to transfer to it the glories of flood and fall, the green forest, the blowing winds, the white water of the rushing cascade, as with a turn of the hand a divine influence descends upon the scene. These are the joys of painting."

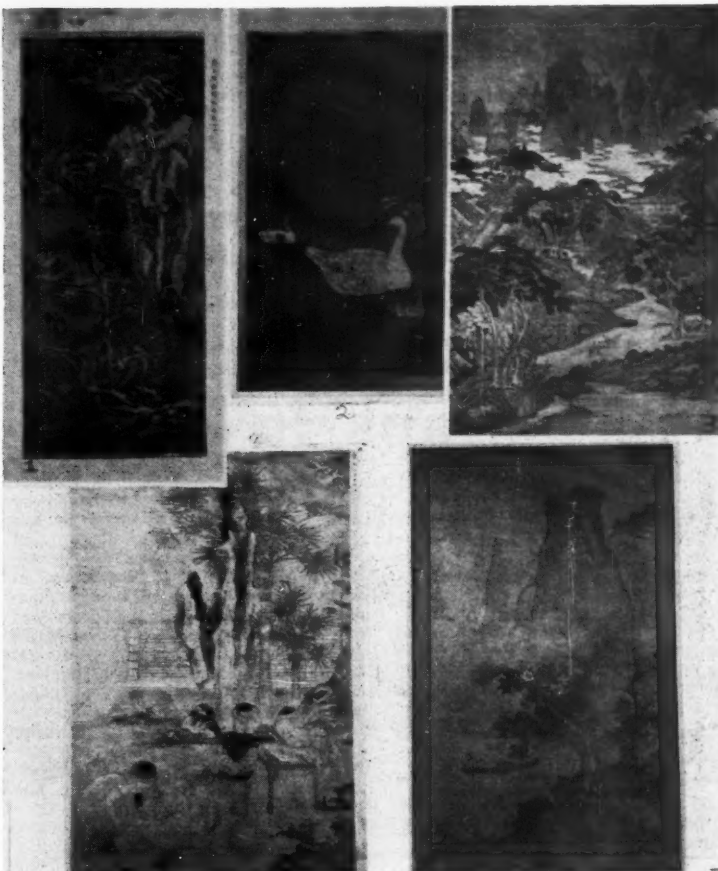

The sixth canon places copying on a par with the fundamental rules of the art of painting and this in time became a real danger to Chinese art.

T'ang Dynasty (A.D. 618-905). In the seventh century the empire was united under the great T'ang Dynasty and it is conceded that this was the period of China's greatest art. Few paintings of the period remain today.

Among the earliest of the T'ang masters was Wei-ch'ih I-seng who came to China from Khotan about 630. A copy of a picture attributed to him is in the Freer Collection in Washington. Other artists of this period are Wu Tao-Tzu who is known to have painted over 300 Buddhist frescos as well as paintings on silk of other subjects, all of which have disappeared; and Yen Li-pen famous for his portraits. He was the brother of Yen Li-te, a leading T'ang painter known for his pictures of people of strange countries. Giles attributes to one or the other of these Yen brothers a painting entitled "A man from Ta-ch'in (Syria) reproduced in an early woodcut from the fourteenth century, now in a Cambridge (England) museum.

In Japan there are five authenticated portraits of Buddhist priests painted about 800 by Li Chen but these are in a very damaged condition. Giles says that Li Chen and his son Li Chung-ho were "famous for their paintings of barbarian men and horses."

What are said to be the chief paintings of the T'ang dynasty, how-

Maps in Our Lives

Maps were one of the means civilized man used to enlarge and find out more about his increasingly complex world. A map, combining some fact and some fiction, guided Columbus to the New World. It had been sent eighteen years before the famous voyage to Columbus by Paolo del Toscanelli, Italian physician and cosmographer of Florence. The latter's idea that the world was a sphere and not flat was shared by many intelligent Europeans in the 15th century. Maps were not only of great importance to the early voyagers and explorers they were basic to military campaigns from classical days to the present time of guided missiles and the H-Bomb. Of even more significance is the fact that modern business men, farmers, travelers, school children, and vacationists all use maps. Maps are important, too, to the dweller in cities, for they are employed in urban zoning, in controlling traffic, in conducting business, in subduing crime, and in plotting playgrounds and parks.

Maps in our lives recently formed a comprehensive exhibit at the Rochester, N. Y., Museum. The conception for this exhibition, came from Dr. Walter Clark of the Eastman Kodak Research Laboratories, a scientist and explorer, and former President of the Rochester Museum Association, who has made a hobby of map collecting. He was the chairman of the Museum's advisory committee on the Show, which included H. R. Condit of the Eastman Kodak Company, Dr. J. Edward Hoffmeister, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences of the University of Rochester, Beaumont Newhall, Curator of the George Eastman House and Paul Reed, Director of Instructional Materials of the Rochester Board of Education.

As no one map can give a true picture of the globe for every purpose, some maps are made to show true distances, while others omit this feature to show accurately relative areas of the different parts of the earth. A special section of the exhibit, "How to Understand Maps" will, therefore, include the types and varieties of projections for indicating the globe and global relations, for studying hemispheres and continents, for finding distances and to reveal compass directions. One of the great, modern cartographers, Richard Edes Harrison whose maps appear in Fortune and Life lent the originals of some of his interpretative maps. Excellent panel displays which illustrated forms of projections and the history of maps were lent by the Joslyn Art Museum, Omaha, Nebr., through the courtesy of its Director, Eugene Kingman.

A special feature of the Fair were varied types of globes for teaching use including those which are illuminated from within and a new collapsible globe of plastic which can be inflated like a football. These were lent by the Rochester Board of Education. Few people are aware that, perhaps, what was the first globe designed for school use, called "The Improved Terrestrial Globe" was invented and sold in Rochester in 1845 by Ezra Cornell, a surveyor and school teacher. The only surviving example of this visual aid, lent by the New York State Library, was one of the highlights of the exhibit.

The London Exhibition of Dolls' Houses

By CLARA H. FAWCETT

Recently there has come to a close in London, England, a most interesting exhibition of dolls' houses. "You can't imagine" said one who had lent her support to this enterprise, "how thrilling it was to come into the Exhibition Hall on Park Lane to find the place illuminated only by tiny lights from the seventeen wonderful dolls' houses. It was like entering fairyland."

The exhibition, undertaken by the House of Bewlay, was sponsored by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth for the benefit of the Children's Aid Society and all the exhibits were on loan from museums and private individuals. Our own Miss Janet Pinney, toy curator of the Museum of the City of New York sent The Van Cortland House Museum and an American Folding House. The latter consists of lithographic pictures placed on heavy cardboard. It was popular here in the 1890's.

Aside from the wee inhabitants of the houses, the only doll in the collection was the lovely portrait doll modelled by the well-known American artist, Martha Thompson. In honor of the royal patron of the show, Elizabeth II, this miniature likeness of the Queen stood alone on the mantelpiece within a huge glass dome. It was dressed by the owner, Mrs. Laura Treskow, in handsome old lace, decorated all over and around the pattern with old French paste stone. Over the tight bejeweled bodice was the blue ribbon Order of the Garter. See photograph on page 53.

An introductory note in the catalog describing the exhibition reads: "It is probably the first time that so distinguished and varied a collection of Dolls' Houses has been gathered together under one roof. These Baby Houses, typical of their period, have a wide appeal for historians, architects, collectors, and for children who love the world of Lilliput. For all those, in fact, who have retained something of the wonder and curiosity of childhood."

"A tour of a period doll's house is to make a voyage into the domestic history of the past. Here, in these small and perfect dwellings, in the gentlemen's residences designed and built in the era of leisure we have a comprehensive picture of the vanished yesterdays and the slow, pleasant tempo of the daily life of our ancestors is in these rooms, caught and held like flies in amber."

In a foreword Miss Vivien Greene, author of English Dolls' Houses, a recent publication of The Batsford Press, Ltd., elaborates on this idea when she says: "It is in these dolls' houses, more than anywhere else, that we can see something of the day-to-day domestic life of their period, as if reflected minutely and sharply in the favorite convex looking-glass. Far more truly shown than in some full-scale arrangement of rooms in a museum, where only the finest examples are chosen for display, where splendid silver and landscapes and panelling are all gathered together in one bay brilliant with electric light, or with daylight through modern machine rolled panes."

"Even those great country houses through which we are shepherded show us their formal salons and picture galleries often decorated with fresh paintwork and with modish flower arrangements, a heightened presentation that obscures our own evocation of their past. But in the Baby House we can see the rooms that tell us most; the fireless bedroom, the dark kitchen. Here are those rows of dish covers, the brick floor, the pump, the tinder box and the roasting screen. Very, very few unaltered kitchens survive where these things are used or are even displayed; and in a few instances we know that some pattern of plate-warmer or trivet existed at all, only because we find it still in miniature, complete, composed, in a Dolls' House."

Sketch a shows the Westbrook Baby House, handed down in the family of Mrs. Cyril Holland-Martin, originally made for Elizabeth, daughter of John Westbrook, about 1705. It was at that time presented by a group of tradesmen who were leaving their district in the Isle of Dogs. Although the original dolls are missing, the house shows a well set up English household early in the reign of Queen Anne.*

Sketch b, the Tate Baby House, built about 1760, was loaned by the Bethnal Green Museum. This well-known Baby House is one of the finest examples of its kind. A beautiful winding staircase is lighted from above by a lantern dome. The dining room wall paper and much of the furniture are original, although there are later additions.

Among the other dolls' houses on display were four loaned by Mrs. Graham Greene, wife of the novelist, the Haunted House, c. 1715, the Mahogany House, c. 1720, Belgravia, a fine example of a town house of 1850, and Shell Villa, (c. 1880) "A marine residence offering refined lodgings for cats in need of sea air." Only two modern Dolls' Houses were shown. Most of them date back to the early 1700's.

*A magnificent collection of silver toys is associated with the Westbrook House. Many of the pieces bear London hall-marks and are struck with the Lions Head erased, an indication that the metal is of the high standard compulsory between 1697 and 1720.

"Buttons Are Memories"

By LAURA LASSEN

Mrs. Fred Gay, Poplar Bluff, Mo., is a Button collector.

Mrs. Gay's first reaction when meeting anyone is, "My, what an interesting (or pretty) button!" The perfect arrival or going-home gift for her is a few odd or unusual buttons.

Surprisingly enough, most buttons are odd, and every mother's button box yields new treasures, and puts a new gleam in the eye of the collector.

Mrs. Gay has been collecting buttons since 1938, and has accumulated about 20,000 different ones, mostly by gifts. Many buttons in her collection remind her of the donors, some of whom have passed on. Many were given by youngsters who admired her collection years ago, and who are now grown, some serving their country in uniform, some workers in far-away-places, some with children of their own.

The picture shows part of her collection mounted on boards two feet square.

Her most prized button? Well, they are all so pretty! But the one she likes best is the Tenderfoot badge given her by a Boy Scout who later flew "The Hump" in Asia, and still later came back to be a dentist in his home town. In Mrs. Gay's words: "Buttons are Memories."

Books Reviewed

Veterans of the Road by Elizabeth Nagle, Arco Publishing Company Inc., 480 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y. 240 pp. 101 illustrations. Price $3.75.

Veterans of the Road is a history of the Veterans Car Club of Great Britain which was organized in Brighton on November 23, 1930, to discover, preserve, and restore to road-worthiness, the early automobiles of the world. The three founders were Sammy Davis, Jackie Masters, and John Wylie.

The club members took the cars where they found them. John Wylie, the club's first Honorable Secretary, found his Wolseley on a car dump with its original 1904 registration number Y394. The Club's first President, S. C. H. Davis, found his 1897 Leon Bolle, a rusty heap near the old works at Le Mans, France—a three wheeled machine with the single wheel at the rear. He spent two years preparing it for the Brighton run.

This London to Brighton Run began in 1896, November 14, when an Act of Parliament permitted an automobile for the first time "to run at 12 miles an hour with no man preceding it." It has grown into one of the great sporting events of Great Britain. The cars featured seem to be predominantly English, there are many from Scotland, France, Germany, and elsewhere over Europe, and a few from the United States. The Locomobile Steamer, Cadillac, Baker Electric, White Steamer, Brush, Oldsmobile, and Ford, are among those named.

In 1952 the Brighton Run was filmed and shown widely. It is credited with promoting the Horseless Carriage Club of Colorado Run for Veterans cars from Denver to Brighton, Colorado, with the age limit of cars set at 1914.

The fine illustrations, numbering almost a hundred pages, show the development of the automobile from 1875 to 1916. There is also a chapter on Veteran Vernacular which I believe would be interesting and informative to all who make old automobiles their hobby.

Contemporary Handweaving, by Ruth Overman and Lula Smith. Iowa State College Press, Ames, Iowa. 180 pp., $7.50

Here is another magnificent example of the literary contributions made by the excellent publishing enterprises of our colleges and universities. Handweaving is rapidly becoming one of the most important of our creative hobbies, and this beautifully printed and illustrated volume vividly suggests exactly why this is. Miss Overman has won considerable fame in the design and production of textiles for architects and decorators; while Miss Smith, who teaches textile design at the State University of Iowa, has exhibited at many famous shows as have her pupils. Hence both authors are eminently qualified to set forth the truly significant theme which underlies handweaving: creative design.

There is a definite association between the imaginative process of working out an intricate and original fabric design on the loom and that of the predominant creative process of every major art, whether it be painting, music or sculpture. The book deals primarily with the versatility and artistic adaptability of the popular four-harness loom, on which, as the authors illuminatingly show, there can be produced virtually any type of fabric which a weaver's skill can design. The many illustrations not only lead the reader through the steps of setting up the warp and design, but also detail many fascinating contemporary achievements by our nation's finest weavers, notably Mrs. Elsa Regensteiner who teaches handweaving at Chicago's Art Institute, and the gifted Lili Blumenau. Editorially, the makeup and printing of this handsome book are a joy to the eye, a superb accomplishment by one of our country's finest college presses.

American Heritage, 551 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, New York. Price per volume at bookstores, $2.95; per year by subscription for six issues, $12.00.

American Heritage, The Magazine of History, is sponsored by The American Association for State and Local History and by The Society of American Historians. The August volume, for example, has 14 major articles. Of these De Sota and the Golden Road, by Victor W. von Hagen was, to this reader, the most fascinating. A close second was the tragic story, When Mary Lincoln was Adjudged Insane, by Ruth Painter Randall. A department, Reading, Writing and History, devoted to The Civil War: the Truth and the Legend, by Bruce Catton, was scholarly and worth while. An article made for America by Ruth B. Davidson, on patriotic tableware supplied the new Republic by distant lands, is illustrated in color. In fact, the illustrations generally are splendid. This source of American historic detail makes definitely good reading.

The Country Store by Larry Freeman, published by Century House, Watkins Glenn, N. Y., 1955. 51 pages. Well illustrated. Paper bound. Price $1.00.

The Country Store is a study of the American Country Store from cross roads trading post to the 20th century, as a gathering place of exchange of news, politics, and know-how, and the role of the general storekeeper as a means of bartering the furs, loom or farm products for the needed things brought in from elsewhere. The study is divided into three main sections: The Pioneer Store of 1800, The Village Store of 1850, and The General Store of 1900. From a page showing a 1773 inventory to The Cracker Barrel Returns, from illustration of a potbellied stove and captains' chairs to a page of sunbonnet styles, it is an informative story of this phase of Americana.

The Rockhound Buyers Guide, An Encyclopedia for the Rockhobbyists of America. Third Edition Edited and Compiled by Leland Quick. Published by The Lapidary Journal, 1237 Highway 101, Del Mar, California. Paper Bound. 168 pages. Price $2.00.

This highly informative edition of The Rockhound Buyers Guide, contains all the new collecting spots and trips in Eastern Arizona, New York State, Western Pennsylvania, the Appalachians, British Columbia, Washington State, Wyoming, Connecticut, and California.

It lists hundreds of dealers and their products, lists and describes most of the books on gems, lapidary and silversmith, and minerals; gives the hardness of each gem material, the motels and trailer parks catering to rockhounds, and much "how to do it" information. The Shop Helps for craftsman, lapidary and jeweler are interesting and valuable.

As a lover of jewel stones myself, I found this book fascinating reading

MY NEW ENGLAND HOLIDAY

sponded with me, and I had wonderful letters from Miss Emerson telling me of the valentine collection of Henry Ford which had been on display at the Inn.

Miss Emerson had also authored a splendid little volume around the life of Esther Howland, and the Howland Valentines, the creation and manufacture of which was indeed a departure for a young Miss of Esther Howland's period. In the middle 50's women were very much in the background as regarded business enterprises. Miss Emerson had been a very active newspaper reporter, and had written a number of articles on Valentines, and so I was eager to meet her. She had written me from West Newbury that she would be there for awhile. When I told my hostess that this was also on my list provided it was not too far, she smiled and said, "It's really just around the corner." She called Miss Emerson who was coming up to Sudbury that day for a short visit, so an appointment was made for Wayside Inn for luncheon.

We called for her at the home of relatives, and on to the Inn. And what a meeting we had, a regular talk fest, for she had much to tell us of Sudbury and the Inn, as she had lived in Sudbury as a child and played often at the Inn. She was so well known and loved that she enjoyed carte blanche. Even the Valentines through her request were shown to us, and these we enjoyed seated at a long table where we could spread them before us and study them through their protective covers of cellophane. It was a wonderful day, full of colorful anecdotes, for Miss Emerson is a stimulating conversationalist, and is steeped in the traditions of New England. A worthy daughter of the famous house of Emerson, distinguished and charming.

The hands of the clock had raced around to the time of parting and we were loathe to separate, but as a fitting finale to this day Mrs. Van Ness became a member of the Valentine Collectors of America. She will make a splendid contribution to the cause, for she has a comprehensive collection of old valentines, and is an ardent intelligent collector of things beautiful.

As we were leaving Wayside Inn, Miss Priscilla Staples came to bid us safe journey, to say how happy she was to meet us, and to invite us back again soon. To her warm welcome we could truthfully reply, Speed the Day. And when that day comes, I want to stay as an overnight guest, for I still must see the beautiful bed-rooms that are such an attraction to visitors. Perhaps I can share them with you. Would you like that? Or better still, make your own pilgrimage to this historic landmark. Its tranquil atmosphere will make to-day's hectic pace seem far removed, for here all is serenity.*

Before bringing this thoroughly enjoyed holiday to a close I must tell you of two auctions that followed, and here let me say that no two New England auctions are ever the same. The rank and file of household articles vary to be sure, just as their previous owners differed, but it is the group who gather, drawn by their favorite auctioneer, as much as by the articles mentioned in the notice. As for instance—One of these auctions was held in a barnlike auction room, and apparently run by two partners, auctioneers both. They varied as much as day and night.

Again we were not in time to look over the items to be auctioned, and as it was piping hot outside, we gathered under the roof. One auctioneer was firey, moved quickly, thought quickly, and used from time to time rather colorful language. It behooved the would-be-buyer not to go wool gathering, lest he turn just in time to see his hoped for acquisition carried off by another eager beaver. I was so fascinated by this procedure that several desirable items appeared and disappeared in the twinkling of an eyelash. I decided to keep my weather eye open, and just then the auctioneers changed places. This one moved more slowly, talked with deliberation, and brooked no haranguing. Under his spell I bid on a small student lamp, the type I had been wanting ever since a friend sent me the lovely little lamp shade with two groups of Greenaway children, which was shown in my article "A Greenaway Nursery." in HOBBIES of September 1951.

Other bids were called, but after my last bid I sat back for the auctioneer had looked my way as he said "sold." I opened my purse to pay for my bid, and when I looked up the boy was standing at the row of seats in back of me. Evidently the lucky man had been using sign language. I was naturally disappointed, and asked only to see it, and of course I told the gentleman why I had wanted it. Then very suddenly he lost interest, for he had seen what the auctioneer evidently had overlooked, the long portion that holds the wick was missing. However, the precious rim was intact, and it was just right for my little Greenaway shade, so without further ado we came to an amicable understanding, and soon the long looked for little lamp was mine. The missing part bothers me not at all for a reliable lamp man can supply another old part and put Humpty-Dumpty together again. I bought several other items, but with my eyes wide open. And I'm learning.

At this same auction my hostess had wonderful luck. She bid successfully on many nice items and was gathering quite a load for the return trip to the blue shuttered barn. Then pictures came up, and among them Currier and Ives items. My hostess was bidding. I held my breath for interruptions are sometimes fatal at an auction and hoped for the best, and the best happened. The Currier she won was none other than the famous "Lightning Express Leaving the Junction" and definitely genuine. At this point we decided to leave, each carrying our treasures, and each completely satisfied.

The second auction was held at night, right on the grounds of the auctioneer who had been a previous Police Chief. He was assisted by his son, whom the father had been grooming for some time past, and the son was worthy the careful training.

The place was well lighted, and comfortable chairs set about. The auction progressed rapidly, as many of the parents were accompanied by young children, who eventually grew restless. As the auction progressed I lost track of time and items, and gave my attention to the young man, whose enunciation fascinated me, as my own would most likely have intrigued him.

I liked this young auctioneer's manner. He was so sincere. If any piece had even the slightest defect he disclosed the fact. Also I noted that prices were very reasonable, and that the young people attending purchased needed articles very carefully. I also noted that items brought up for auction were clean and inviting. Glass and china had been washed, cooking utensils were clean, and altogether there was a feeling of confidence, for this family of which the young auctioneer was most likely the eldest, helped throughout the evening, a well organized unit.

The young folks attending were more than likely former school friends of the auctioneer and he watched over their interests carefully. The older folks attending were evidently friends of long standing and there was a feeling of mutual trust. My hostess purchased many items, but I had promised myself I would not burden her with the care of more of mine. However, I could not resist a fine oil painting of Pond Lilies. . . my mother's favorite flower.

I could go on and on relating trips to highspots . . . the Boston Main Library, Salem and The House of Seven Gables, Hawthorne's home—Marblehead, where the renowned Adams Sea-Food dinner was served to us, but time has run out and Holidays must come to an end, but there are other vacation trips coming up, and of course return trips, and you know I'm looking forward to the day when our dear friends will come driving up in the blue station wagon. And what a hearty greeting they will receive, for they will be welcomed with open arms. In due time my "Auction finds" will emerge, and each colorful day spent with these dear friends, relived . . . For

There is no friend like an old friend,
Who has shared our morning days,
No warmth just like his handclasp,
No homage like his praise.
Fame is a gaudy sunflower,
With leaves of shining gold,
But friendship is the breathing rose,
With sweets in every fold.

EXPLANATION

* Editors Note — The Wayside Inn was completely destroyed by fire on December 23, long after this article was in type. Perhaps, in due time, a replica of this famous shrine will enable others to absorb some of the historic and homey atmosphere as described by Mrs. Sascier.

ECCLESIASTICAL RINGS

ed in the Middle Ages, of widows taking a vow of chastity, and receiving a particular robe and ring. Sir Harris Nicolas printed in the 'Testamenta Vetusta' an abstract of the will of Lady Alice West, of Hinton Marcel, widow of Sir Thomas West, dated in 1395, and proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. There is a bequest to her son Thomas amongst other things of 'a ring with which I was yspoused to God.'

Sir Harris rightly says that this could not have been her marriage-ring, and it was certain that she had not entered a convent. This is still more clearly made out by a reference to the transcript of the will in the registers of the Prerogative Court.

Legacies and gifts of rings for religious purposes were frequent in former times; thus amongst other rich gifts to the Cathedral of Canterbury, Archbishop Hubert, in 1205, presented four gold rings adorned with precious stones. Henry the Third, while on a visit to St. Alban's Abbey, made some costly presents, including bracelets and rings, and five years afterwards gave similar gifts at another visit to the same abbey.

'Formerly, bishops and priests blessed alike; latterly bishops reserved to themselves the right of blessing with their fingers, the priest with the priest with the open hand; the bishops facing the congregation, the priests in profile, with the hand placed edgeways.'

BELLS

where an armament train station of the R.A.F. is situated there is a one-time ship's bell serving as the church bell, and at St. George's church, Oldham Road, Manchester, is a bell from the Bremen Steamer "Rhein" dated 1868. In the Scilly Island the five churches have one bell each, four of which appear to have been originally ship's bells. One would hardly expect to find a ship's bell in a Japanese Temple and registered as a National treasure of the country! Yet the Shunko-in, one of the subsidiary temples of the Mioshin-ji possesses one which is claimed to be the bell of Namban-ji. It is unquestionably of Western manufacture, for it is rung with a clapper inside instead of being struck from the outside as in the case of all Eastern bells whether small or large. On the waist in low-relief is the date 1577 and three repetitions of a device consisting of the sacred monogram "I.H.S." surmounted by a cross with the three sacred nails below. This bell was taken to Korea by the Lord of Sendai at the time of Hideyoshi's invasion of that country, and used as a ship's bell, being brought back again at the conclusion of the expedition.

The writer frequently receives from the Admiralty notice of the sale of ship's bells from British ships that have been famous in historic association, and one wonders where some of these will end their days. At the moment I have a small one mounted in a suitable frame and standing on the top of my desk and sometimes used as a dinner gong! The bell of the well-known liner "Lord Gough" is now on the stage at Eastham on the Mersey, whilst that of the "Royal Charles" which sank off the coast with £350,000 is now at Lord Boston's castle in Anglesey. The bell of the original "Britannic" (1870) is preserved by the White Star Line. The bell of the "La Marguerite" the ship that conveyed the City of London Rifles to France, is now to be found at their headquarters in Farringdon Street, London. Thus we see that some of our old ship's bells do finish their activities in peaceful and appropriate surroundings, no longer to be subjected to the caprices of storm and tempest.

CHINESE PAINTINGS

Another famous artist of this great T'ang period was Wu Tao-tzu, a poor orphan boy, who was brought at an early age to the Imperial court because of his recognized talent. He is said to have painted over three hundred frescos and records list ninety-three of his pictures in the Imperial collections in the twelfth century. Descriptions of his art indicate that he was realistic to a degree unusual in his day. A twelfth century critic says of his paintings "This picture which was painted by Wu Tao-tzu is very different from those now to be seen in temples and pagodas. It has no 'Knife Forest' (where the wicked are impaled on swords), no cauldron of boiling water, no ox-headed or green-faced lictors; and yet its gloomy horrors are such as to make beholders sweat and their hair stand on end, themselves shivering all the time, though it may not be cold. It has caused men to seek after virtue and give up evil practices; after which who can say that painting is only a small art?"

There was a popular belief in China that artists were magicians and so when Wu Tao-tzu died, it was said he entered a cave in one of his own landscapes and was seen no more!

Other artists of this period were Ts'ao Pa and his great pupil Han Kan, noted for their horses; Han Huang who painted buffaloes and rustic scenes; Hsieh Chi, known for his crane, the emblem of longevity and often found in his paintings; Chang Nan-pen who painted fire in a peculiar fashion; and Sun Wei for the remarkable way in which he portrayed water.

At this time Chinese painting seems to have divided into the Northern and the Southern Schools, although these Schools were apparently at this time, at least, dependent upon style rather than upon any geographical significance. Li Ssu-hsun, born in 651, was known as a great landscape painter and the founder of the Northern School. His paintings were vivid and realistic and Giles says that later scholar-artists considered them as "coarse and hard with nothing scholarly about them." However, at the time the Emperor Ming Huang is quoted as having said "Your skill is more than mortal; at night I hear the splash of water in your picture." His son Li Chao-tao was also a painter and succeeded his father as the head of the Northern School.

Wang Wei, born in 699, was equally famous as a poet and painter. It was he who founded the Southern School of painting. His paintings were in sharp contrast to those of Li Ssu-hsun's and the other members of the Northern School. He developed a style of ink-painting expressive of the mood of a poem and much more subjective than paintings by the other artists of the period. Copies exist in London and Washington of his "Scenery of the Wang Ch'uan." Genre pictures were also painted during this great T'ang period and "Ladies Beating and Preparing Silk" in the Boston Museum is attributed to these years.

OPENING APRIL 19, 1956*THE COUNTRY STORE*AT THE POOR MAN'S SHOP*Even the "props" will be for sale.

If you are seeking background stuff for your own country store, this is your shopping ground for the primitives that for a decade has made THE POOR MAN'S SHOP one of the outposts in the country shops in New England. New acquisitions are pouring into the old house every day, as always.

POMONA GLASS

By ALBERT CHRISTIAN REVI

Pomona, the Roman goddess of the fruit of the trees, lent her name to one of the more subtle products of the New England Glass Works. The delicate gelid appearance of Pomona glass has long been a source of eye pleasure to collectors of this ware.

The first patent covering Joseph

Locke's method for producing Pomona was issued April 28, 1885. The article to be produced was made and shaped from homogeneous crystal glass in the usual way, after which it was covered entirely with a wax or acid-resisting material. On the portion of the article which was to have the iced or frosted ground a series of curved lines were cut through the resist with a wheel or some other cutting agent. This necessitated a great many lines criss-crossing each other. The outline for the ornamentation found on almost all pieces of this ware was also cut through the resist before the article was subjected to the action of the etching-acid which ate into the glass wherever the resist was removed.

The article having been etched, the wax or acid resisting pellicle referred to was removed. The outlined ornamentation was filled in with colored mineral stains and the piece was fired in a muffle to fix the colors. The amber stain, more often encountered than any other color in this ware, is a dilute nitrate of silver. Locke indicated that other coloring agents could be employed and so we find numerous pieces on which a blue metallic stain has been painted.

Mr. Locke illustrated his Letters Patent with a tumbler on which the initials "C.G." are clearly visible in the frosted body. The initials very probably represent the names of Crosby & Gregory, patent attorneys for the New England Glass Company. The top of the tumbler has been decorated with a band of Acanthus leaves.

A small cream pitcher with ruffled top which has been stained a pale amber. Blue "Corn Flower" pattern with amber leaves around the bulbous mid-section of the pitcher. This piece and other fine specimens of glass were presented to the Toledo Museum of Art by Edward Drummond Libbey, who was also its founder.
—Photograph courtesy Toledo, Ohio, Museum of Art.

Specimens of "Pomona" glass, made by the New England Glass Company, Cambridge, Mass., and presented to the U. S. National Museum in 1886. The tall tankard-shaped pitcher on the left has been decorated with butterflies and stalks of wheat and is a particularly rare specimen. The sugar bowl and cream pitcher have been decorated in the "Corn Flower" pattern.

It soon became apparent that Locke's original method for manufacturing Pomona was far too expensive for the company to continue and so he experimented further, searching for a cheaper means of producing somewhat the same effect. On June 15th, 1886 a patent was issued to Joseph Locke covering this less expensive way to make Pomona glass.

In his later patent, which Joseph Locke explained would hasten and simplify the operation of etching to produce a stippled or frosted ground, the article to be treated was first protected at points where it was to be left smooth and plain for decoration by means of a pellicle, or layer of wax. The portion of the article that was to be etched to resemble stipple-work had applied to it a thin layer of some finely pulverized acid-resisting powder has made to adhere to rosin. The fine coating of acid-resisting powder was made to adhere to the surface of the article by means of a thin layer of oil or varnish. The particles adhering to and touching the body of the article protected the said article at such points from the acid in the usual acid bath. All parts of the surface not protected by the powder resist were acted upon by the acid leaving a fine stippling all over the body of the article. The texture of the stippling was governed by the fineness or coarseness of the powdered resist.

Joseph Locke illustrated his Letters Patent with a vase on which he has used the popular "Corn Flower," or "Wild Rose" design. The bottom of the vase rests on a low base formed of a square of glass, its corners bent up to clasp the bulbous base of the vase, and the middle of each side pulled down to form feet. The body of the vase is bulbous at top and bottom, tapering slightly in the center where it is girdled with a band of flowers and leaves.

Some other decorative motifs that can be encountered in this ware on rare occasions are the "Blueberry" pattern; a vineyard design of grapes and leaves; a design of butterflies and wheat grass; and a design of butterflies and pansies.

In neither of Mr. Locke's patents for Pomona glass do we find any mention of pattern-molding although one will seldom find a specimen of Pomona that has not been so treated; nor does he limit the glass body to clear crystal.

On occasion pieces can be found that have not been stained with color of any kind. While these are unusual they are not desirable additions to any collection.

Mr. Locke enjoyed working with acids on glass and in his later life he devoted almost all his time to working in this medium. The glass etching business he established in Pittsburgh in 1888 was not a financial success, however, none can deny that it achieved a high standard in decorative glassware.

ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

CLEARANCE OF FANS FROM MY PERSONAL COLLECTION SINCE I AM NOT NOW LECTURING ON FANS. PRICES REDUCED TO COST

1. Nashiji gold lacquer fan, doubtless brought home from the Orient by a New Englander in the Clipper Ship days. 18 sticks, 8" in length, when open show a complete garden scene with pagodas, gardens and people. At top end of each stick small panel with complete scene. Both sides of fan decorated in same manner. If you know this type of lacquer you know that it is of gold, built up on a black base with tinges of iron red. The fan is perfect but the little red ribbon running through the top of the sticks needs replacing. $12.00

2. White bone fan. Guards and sticks paper thin. The two guards and 18 sticks—10½" long—are cut in an intricate design giving the entire fan an open-work lacy design that is exquisite. Perfect. $10.00

3. The most exquisite French fan. Guards and sticks of mother of pearl with silver inlay and piercing. The leaf is handpainted in exquisite colors. The center is a scene of warriors, women and slaves in front of a canopy with a classical feeling. Around the edges of fan the most exquisite little flowers. Narrow row of white ostrich at top. Silk and silver tassels. $15.00

4. A very choice tortoise shell fan. Sticks 5½" long. These are completely carved in filigree. Band of painted pink and blue (very tiny) flowers just below the narrow ribbon band at top. Two of the sticks have little edge breaks at top which are unimportant. The narrow ribbon at top needs replacing. This is really choice $10.00 I have dozens of fans besides these described, chiffon, feathers, paper. But PLEASE don't write unless you are really interested. I conscientiously answer every letter whether a stamp is sent or not and sometimes after pages of descriptions, I never even get an acknowledgement. I sometimes wonder if it is a game!

ILLUSTRATED:

- (1) A pair of unusual wine glasses about 5 1/4" h. Cup is striped with opaque-white and dark blue stripes against a crystal ground. The hollow knob in the stem contains a glass figure. In one a Giraffe perfectly formed in natural colors; in the other a Monkey also perfectly formed and also in natural colors. The foot and stem is in pale transparent blue. These are superb examples of the lamp-workers art. Sold only as a pair.
- (3) One of the most unusual items to come to our attention in quite some time. A uranium-yellow (yellow Burmese) horn. Glossy finished and pattern-molded with ribs. The horn is some 13" long and can be quite noisy when blown into. It is a unique item worthy of the most advanced collection.

- (5) A very handsome Vasa Murrhina water pitcher. Lined with opaque-white it has been splashed all over the outer casing with splashes of deep rose & generously sprinkled with silver mica flecks. The whole body has been pattern-molded to resemble a cabbage rose or an artichoke. Applied crystal handle and quite heavy quality

- glass. This would make a fine addition to the most discriminating collection.
- (4) A rarity in Pearlware (mother-of-pearl). This vase is a deep brown color from top to base with a swirled pattern in the glass. Completely covered with a fine design of gold all over the vase. 6 1/2" h. Lined with a delicate pink.
- (5) From my own collection. An example of the New England Glass Works Opaque Green. This spoonholder or small vase 5" h.
- (6) A rare tumbler for the tumbler collector. The New England Glass Works Opaque Green.

NOT ILLUSTRATED:

- (7) A large and beautifully shaped Wheeling Peach Blow vase (Lee, Vic. Glass, illustration 238, upper photo, right hand corner). Superbly colored, glossy finish. 8 1/4" h.
- (8) A pair of blown custard glass hobnail baskets, bulbous bodies with clover-leaf tops edged with cranberry-red; applied amber thorn handles. Heavy quality glass with deep pontil marks. 6 1/4" h. and 8" through their most bulbous portion.
- (9) A 10" New England (Wild Rose) Peach Blow vase. Beautiful coloring.
- (10) Three striped glass tumblers. (a) 3 1/4" h. Molded foot like finger bowls have. Striped with dark blue, opaque-white and aventurine (goldstone). (b) 3 1/4" h. Molded foot like finger bowls have. Striped with turquoise-blue, opaque-white and aventurine (goldstone). The rim is edged with cranberry. (c) 3 1/4" h. Molded foot like finger bowls have. Striped with deep rose, opaque-white and aventurine (goldstone). The rim is edged with aventurine (goldstone). We have another tumbler height. 3 1/4" striped in dark blue, opaque-white and aventurine. This tumbler is narrow at the base and widens out at the top.
- (11) Two Pomona salt shakers. Tubular-shape w/ silver screw tops. One is decorated with corn flowers design and the other has been decorated with the rare pansy and butterfly design, sold only as a pair. They stand about 4" high, quite heavy glass. The coloring is not deep but these are a very rare find for the advanced or beginner collector.

Magnificent Mahogany Cornice Mirror, made c. 1810, fully museum quality in its hand carved, roped and acanthus pilaster detail, roeding of the post blocks and divider, molding of inner and outer frame, and cornice molded pediment. Lovely brass rosettes complete this superb mirror, original in every detail to the finish itself and perfectly kept in an early home here. It is $43, though the quality warrants much more. Length 39", width 22".

Cherrywood Dressing Table that may double as small server, has two drawers and very nicely turned legs in country Sheraton styling. It is 36" long, 30" high, full hand dovetailed joinery, solid end made c.1820 and you must remove the present old finish. An early piece of nice quality, difficult to find, and a dealer will be pleased with our $48 price tag. It is a well preserved item.

Chippendale Mahogany Knee-hole Desk of high quality has typical cabriole legs, fine brasses, handsome cornflower detail on center drawer, and is in the original finish. For real desk use this is best of all desks and in perfect condition.

about 75 years old, suited to the finest interior and we are pleased to have it available at $59. Such a desk is hard to find.

Chippendale Desk Chair made c.1760, with beautiful reed molded square legs, pierced splat, slip seat and good old finish. An early one in mahogany, of fine quality, the $24 price tag result of a very fortunate estate purchase by us. Act quickly!

Rosewood Eight Day Shelf Clock by Daniel Pratt in fine original condition, one of the highest grade cases ever made. Glasses good, height 17", priced for a dealer at $32. Perfect running condition.

Pine Solid End Chest of Drawers, two little drawer section at top, finely turned feet, old grained finish easily removed for mellow pine natural and structurally in wonderful condition.

Fine joinery and original throughout, an old one dating c.1820 and our price will please that customer who needs more than her money's worth. It is $55, and we'll gladly give any details desired while on hand.

Pair Fine Walnut Deep Frames in original finish 12x14, with gold liners. Best in years, $11 pr.

Pine Two Drawer Stand, Country Hepplewhite, Rhode Island made c.1815, top size 18x18, design and proportions excellent. All hand joined, but you must refinish so priced at $23 to give you a good bargain in a very, very nice early stand.

Eight Day Marine Clock, brass case 8" diameter, a dandy one in good running order and dealer priced at $26. You'll need to order quickly on this.

Country Chippendale Stretcher Base Tavern Table of unusual merit in that it has a three-way stretcher at the typical square-legged base. Made c.1760 in pine and maple, all mortise and tenon joined, of clean, simple lines that will be a credit to any room, done in pine. Not the cheapest, but surely one of the most handsome early American tavern tables obtainable. Request any desired details.

Early Sea Chest of mellowed pine wood, unique in having a great deal of tiger stripe curly maple detail in the construction. When refinished this will be a piece of great beauty and probably the only one existing. No paint on it; finish was originally natural but is dull. Cannot ever be duplicated, and a bargain at our $29 price.

This dealer has found our things good enough for his personal collection, and has just written: "We have several pieces in our own collection which we purchased from you and prize very highly. . . crating of other pieces you have shipped to us has always been very good." That speaks for quality in the earlier American things we offer; satisfaction in the price of every order; and recognition of the uniformly high standards to which every item we ship is packed or crated. If you need the kind of things our early New England homes provide, at a price you can afford to pay, write to us. For if it was ever made in New England, we'll be able to help you - promptly, courteously, and at a sensible price.

Saints of St. Augustine

(See Cover Views)

Conducted by CECIL ZINKAN

The Museum greeted dealers and collectors from all parts of the country at its 9th annual antiques show, held as usual in the old casino of the building. Charles Marston, manager of the Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair, was in charge of the show.

On opening morning, annual tribute services were held at the tomb of O. C. Lightner, who is buried on the Museum grounds. Earl King of Chicago and Miami, presided at the exercises. Services were conducted by the Reverend H. C. Hardin, minister of the First Methodist Church, St. Augustine. During the services, those in attendance participated in the placing of flowers on Mr. Lightner's grave.

The Buick Magazine for December, 1955, in an illustrated article, by Len Barnes, had this to say about the Lightner Museum of Hobbies:

"If it is true that every human has some kind of special interest or hobby there's a museum in St. Augustine, Florida, that should interest everyone. It's the Lightner Museum of Hobbies, the world's most unusual museum . . . a collection of collections.

"Its more than forty rooms contain thousands of exhibits and displays, including everything from Lincoln relics to a display of political campaign buttons, French crystal and sea shells.

"The first-time visitor to the museum asks the inevitable question, 'Where did all this originate?' The answer is: 'With the late O. C. Lightner, of Chicago.'

"Often referred to as the dean of all hobbyists, Lightner published a national magazine called 'HOBBIES'. Through this publication came his interest in collecting things. There is an admission charge, with all receipts going into the museum's maintenance.

"Among the more famous attractions the museum offers its visitors are the mammoth Whittington Clock, which dates to the eighteenth century, the Louis Napoleon desk, a rare collection of crystal and Dresden china, and an exhibit of phonographs trailing back to the first one made by Thomas A. Edison.

"You can visit the museum and browse. There are no guided tours, although arrows will direct you through the museum's many rooms. Everyone is free to spend as much time as he wishes enjoying whatever strikes his fancy."

ON TIME

extent in modern times, it continues to be worn and has become a generally accepted symbol of conservatism and respectability. In addition to gold and silver, the Albert was made of other materials, including links of tortoise shell. Today unusual examples are sought for conversion into bracelets and other items of feminine jewelry.

By the end of the 18th Century another type of jewelry had come into being. This was the romantic fad of hairwork, in which the hair of a dearly beloved, or more often, of a dearly departed, was made into rings, brooches, lockets, and watch-chains. The commonest form utilized a lock of hair mounted under glass in a locket or brooch. More unusual were the Memento Mori in which the hair was used to create miniature paintings symbolizing grief as a woman mourning into a funerary urn under a weeping willow. Hair was used to create the lines of the composition as well as the masses in this unique form of miniature painting.

A more manly example of hairwork was the watch chain woven of human hair and mounted with gold. The more elaborate chains had medallions hand fashioned in gold and often inset with precious or semi-precious stones, which were interspersed at intervals along the chain.

An especially fine example is shown here from the collection of Dr. Stephens of Alameda, Calif. The chain is plaited of hair of fine color in three different types of weave which are repeated in the chain. The ends are mounted in gold with niello inlay and carved decoration.

Although to many a hairwork chain is a macabre bit of jewelry, it nevertheless recalls an era of pre-occupation with the romantic when it was the proper thing to wear one's heart on the vest if not on the sleeve.

Another unusual watch chain, which forms part of this writer's collection, is of Japanese workmanship. It consists of fifteen medallions carved in the round from ivory with pierced ends and silver links. Each side of each medallion is inlaid in semi-precious stones to represent the figure of an insect in a most realistic manner. Each inlay consists of a number of minute pieces of stone painstakingly carved and assembled. Even close examination under high magnification fails to reveal the jointing of the carved pieces and the effect of reality is only enhanced. A perfect illusion of the firefly's light is presented with mother-of-pearl while the wings are carved dark agate. The housefly has semi-transparent wings made of light-colored amber and a body of agate or onyx. The lady bug is a vivid portrayal in black onyx with inlaid red spots of coral. The ant is a composition in dark red garnet, and so on. The fob itself is made of iron inlaid in gold with the motif of the Japanese rising sun.

One last example which we illustrate for our readers is reminiscent of California's history, and fittingly enough, it also forms part of the collection of Dr. William B. Stephens of Alameda. The chain dates probably in the late 19th Century, and the links are fashioned from polished plaques of gold ore. Pieces of light ore and others of ore that is almost black are alternated and mounted in gold. The locket is made with light gold ore on one face, and native silver on the other. The back of the watch also combines polished pieces of light and dark ore in a star pattern.

There is a virtually unexplored field for the collector of chatelaines and watch fobs and chains. Because interesting examples are being converted into other forms of jewelry, it will not be long before they will be hard to find.

A collection of the basic types of watch accessories of the various periods would add immeasurably to the interest of a collection of watches, and provide a valuable record of the development of the watch and the way in which it was worn. In addition to the basic types, a good collection would include especially fine examples of the jeweler's art and particularly unusual pieces. Not to be neglected are the "association items" which commemorate special events or belonged to persons of note. As interesting watch accessories become more difficult to find with the passage of time, they will undoubtedly increase in value as collectors items.

OLD SILVER

illustrated in picture No. 9, two spiral lines on the outside of the bowl prove that it is sterling silver as undisputedly as would the hallmark on an English spoon. Norwegian spoons have been found dating back to 1660.

Most beautiful is the lotus flower spoon from Japan, see illustration No. 10. A leaf of the blossom forms the bowl, the stem makes the handle. Exquisite in form and the engraving most delicately done.

The short Dutch spoons, illustration No. 11, are interesting in design but often copied now. They portray specific occasions such as a wedding or funeral. The picture engraved in the bowl, tells the story. They make interesting wall decorations when grouped together. The Chinese tea scoop, illustration No. 12, is earlier, more unique in its form, not too often found.

Our own country also has many designs including the National Capitol at Washington, a derrick from the oil regions of Pennsylvania and, in Philadelphia, the famous pattern of the State House bell, shown in illustration No. 13, to commemorate the reading on July 4th, 1776, by Thomas Jefferson, of a document to remain famous for all time. # STAMPS

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON

Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield has announced the description of the $5.00, Alexander Hamilton stamp of the new ordinary series. This stamp, the fifteenth of the new regular series to be released, will be first placed on sale at Paterson, N. J., on March 19, 1956.

This stamp will be 0.75 by 0.87 of an inch in dimension, arranged vertically and surrounded with a simple picture frame effect, printed by the rotary process, electric-eye perforated, and issued in sheets of 100. The color of the stamp will be black.

The central subject, a likeness of Alexander Hamilton, was made from a photograph of a painting by John Trumbull, furnished by the Mellon Collection, National Gallery of Art, Washington, D. C.

Stamp collectors desiring first day cancellations of the $5.00 stamp may send a reasonable number of addressed envelopes to the Postmaster at Paterson, N. J., with money order remittance to cover the cost of the stamps to be affixed. An enclosure of medium weight should be placed in each envelope and the flap either sealed or turned in. The outside envelope to the Postmaster should be endorsed "First Day Covers."

There is given below information pertaining to the first day sale of the 7-cent Woodrow Wilson stamp of the new ordinary series, which was held at Staunton, Va., on January 10, 1956:

NEW GUIDE ON U. S. PRECANCELS

To celebrate its Thirty-first Anniversary in the Precancel Stamp Business, the Gunesch Precancel House, Chicago, has just issued a completely revised and enlarged Guide to Precancel Collecting.

Regardless of whether you collect U.S. Precancels or not, you should know something about them, because you can never tell what you will run across. Even though you may not be interested, there are thousands of precancel collectors who will gladly take them off your hands. Never discard a precancel until you know what you have. It may be valuable.

Whether you are a novice in this field or an advanced collector, you will find information in this Guide that will help you.

The following is a partial listing of the various chapters, giving you some idea what you can expect and the pleasure you will have from reading this new Guide on Precancel Collecting.

The new chapters added are all on Bureau Issue Precancels which are very much in the limelight right now on account of the Gunesch-Coda Standard Catalog on U.S. Bureau Precancels issued recently. They include:

What are Precancels?
Why Collect Precancels?
Starting a Collection.

The Bureau Issue Precancels include the following chapters, among others:

Introduction
History
Bureau Styles and How to Tell Them
Machine-set Overprints
Building a Bureau Collection
Manufacture and Printing
Coin Varieties and How They Occur
Bureau Playing Card Coils
Errors and Missing Periods

The profusely illustrated bound Guide to Precancel Collecting can be had from the Gunesch Precancel House, Inc., 30 West Washington Street, Chicago 2, Ill. Price $1.00 postpaid.

NEW STAMP PROPOSED

Lewis F. Fisher, Fishers, N. Y., writes HOBBIES, as follows:

As a stamp collector and a student of American History, I have discovered the record of a great American whose name has been overlooked when national honors were passed out.

Since September 26, 1956, is the 175th anniversary of the death of General Andrew Lewis, it is a good time to correct the injustice. I have suggested to Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield that a commemorative stamp be issued to honor him on that date.

Most of the patriotic and historical organizations of Virginia and West Virginia are circulating petitions and sending letters to Mr. Summerfield, and it would be most proper that stamp collectors help out in this cause.

General Lewis has received many honors in his two home states, but outside of that few people have ever heard of him. One of his outstanding achievements as commander of the army of Virginians was defeating the British-aroused Indians in the Battle of Point Pleasant, West Virginia, on October 10, 1774. Historians and Congress have declared it the first Battle of the American Revolution. This battle opened up the Ohio Valley and Kentucky to the Mississippi for settlement. It also gave the Virginian troops the necessary training to combat the British during the rest of the Revolution.

OLD SILVER

bell rang out then, a peal whose echo, instead of dying into silence, has strengthened and deepened until, today it can be heard from one end of the civilized world to the other.

The monument at Bunker Hill, the Black Hills of Dakota, Golden Gate, the luscious oranges from the land of Florida and innumerable other incidents and places engraved for all time in silver for pleasure yesterday, today and tomorrow.

In the early twentieth century, in the homes of the wealthy, different decorations for each course were used by the fastidious. One could tell what kind of soup was being served for dinner by observing whether the spoon was ornamented with branches of nodding tomatoes or had for a bowl, a dainty shell or an inverted turtle's back. Many odd and irregular shapes were in vogue, noticeably, the berry spoon, fashioned like flower petals or long slender leaves. The ice cream spoon was formed like a little silver shovel, sometimes etched with snow crystals or icicles. Orange spoons had a peculiar form, tapering off to a narrow spade like edge, ground sharp in order to cut the fibre of the fruit. The "bonbon" spoon, with its curiously fashioned top, sometimes furnished with a ring.

The practice of making gifts of single spoons was very general at Christmas, Easter and on birthday anniversaries and very sensible, as, in this way, the recipient could become the proud possessor of a collection or set at a comparatively small cost to each donor. This is similar to our custom today, for the bride-to-be; wherein her friends can add to her chosen pattern of flatware. Fond grandmothers and doting relatives could leave their children wonderful memories of places they visited and happy occasions they enjoyed together in this inexpensive way, that will ever be a part of collectors paradise.

The following is from a talk by Robert E. Fellers, Director of the Division of Philately, United States Post Office Department at ceremonies incident to the issuance of the 7-cent Woodrow Wilson stamp at Staunton, Va., on Jan. 10, 1956.

"When a stamp is studied, when the person depicted on the stamp is looked up in history books or encyclopedias, then the stamp assumes its ambassadorial role. For it is then that the contributions made by the person pictured on the stamp become familiar to the collector. And, very often, the collector either passes his collection on to his children or buys more of the stamps for the child's own collection. And then the child, in turn, learns of the greatness of the person on the stamp.

"There then is one example of the permanency of stamps as memorials. For knowledge passed from father to son, from generation to generation, is probably one of the greatest sources of real permanency.

"Take this stamp we are issuing today as an example of what a collector might learn when he studies the life of Woodrow Wilson and his contributions to his country and to the world.

"Perhaps the first characteristic of Mr. Wilson's life to be noticed by the collector would be that of courage—courage to stand true to his convictions under what must have been the most oppressive pressure.

"And these convictions, these beliefs, were not founded on any personal goals which Mr. Wilson hoped to gain for himself.

"Rather, as a recent editorial in the New York Times said, they were designed 'to create and protect equality of opportunity and a better life for all the American people.'

AMERICANA PAGE

Dedicated to the memory of the founder of HOBBIES Magazine, O. C. Lightner, whose enthusiasm in spreading the cause of collecting and the cultural arts pertaining thereto, left us all a legacy of real beauty. By providing the means of bringing persons together under the mutual

O. C. LIGHTNER, Founder of HOBBIES Magazine

bond of collecting, he enriched thousands of lives with the formation of new and enduring friendships.

And since by his every act he deserved the encomium of one of his friends, "a real American," we dedicate this the AMERICANA PAGE.

Bernard De Voto, one of the greatest historians of Americana, appeared on a television program recently explaining how certain ancient Indian tribes had disappeared without a trace but left their culture and their lessons for other Indians of the Southwest to add to their own. Leaving the studio De Voto suffered a heart attack and died. Despite our national loss, there was much in this combination of circumstances to give faith and confidence. Like the early Indians he had been describing, De Voto left behind his contribution to American culture in a form in which it can be added to the culture of others. This author, in his Year of Decision, and Across the Broad Missouri, left behind an interpretation of how many varied forces combined to form the amazing pattern of the growth of America.

There has been too much snap judgment in history. Too frequently the historians have assigned as almost sole cause of a movement in history some significant single condition or event that may have preceded the movement analyzed. De Voto's great contribution to historical method seems to be his careful analysis of each of the many varied causes which combine in unexpected ways to set the trend of history.

"This is where I came in—just thirty-six years ago," said one of our collectors as he called on us after a visit to the mid-winter meeting of the American Farm Bureau in Chicago. "In the old Lasalle Hotel thirty-six years ago I listened to the same group ponder the same problem of mounting agricultural surpluses—and came out with much the same conclusion, that basic economic laws would largely prevail."

In thirty-six years we have cut the number of farms and farmers in half, but we still have a great agricultural surplus for a population that has increased enormously in that time. The one great industrial revolution that most clearly separates the sociology of early Americana from the social basis of modern America is the great exodus from the farm to the city.

In the past thirty-six years "governmental tinkering" with farm prices has seemed a disappointing and erratic thing, but it has softened the mortal economic blow to the socially most stable segment of our economy. Few people in that Lasalle Hotel meeting thirty-six years ago realized that nearly two generations of farmers would come and go before any stability could be expected in agriculture.

During the agricultural meeting this year the great race horse Nashua was sold for a million and a quarter dollars. Horse racing, once "the sport of kings," became after the days of the Natchez Trace the one great national sport of Americana. Now it returns to the sport of financial kings.

The shift from the horse to mechanical power is the real line of demarcation between Americana and modern America, dating about from World War I. Perhaps basic "democracy," as it is known to most of our older generation, began to shift toward socialistic "democracy" at about the same time. Perhaps future historians, assessing the basic social shift of this era, may spot the horse as the central figure in the era of true "Individual Initiative."

— o —

Gunpowder played a peculiar role in early Americana, in helping to unearth traces of the pre-historic culture of America. Deposits of saltpeter, so necessary for gunpowder, were frequently located by following the winding caverns of underground caves. The location of these natural caves became firmly established on many old maps by the gunpowder hunters.

Gunpowder hunters were by no means archaeologists, and gave but passing interest to the few things left by ancient Indian tribes, some of whom had visited or even used these caves. Trampled under the feet of the gunpowder crews, and the tourist, modern archaeologists are finding bits and pieces of prehistoric discard that tell an ever increasing story of the deep, dark past. Modern atomic warfare is providing radioactivity methods of reading the dates on these ancient discards. Radio active carbon is telling us which deposits in the rock layers came how many thousand years before which other layers.

Few of these caves approach the twenty thousand years of human history written at Sandia in New Mexico, but by working backward always farther into the past our American archaeologists are writing new backgrounds to the background of American history.

— o —

In our opinion the greatest story coming out of Russia in years carried recently only small headlines and was not read by many people. Why should it be? There was nothing startling about it. It was simply the fact that the Russian journalists, who recently visited the United States, wrote in their papers that they liked the American people they had met, including some of our business tycoons, and they found American factories highly effective and efficient.

This news, headlinewise is a small firecracker in the worldwide atomic explosion of "Freedom of the Press," that is following the transition from illiteracy to reading, writing and listening in so many parts of the world. The basic penetrating power of a free press in the end always baffles those who would "control" it. A controlled press always tends to free itself. It teaches people to read. And when they read they begin to think. They begin to want the true facts. They will get them in the end.

— o —

The recent splurge of newspaper publicity on valuable antiques found in old attics is a two-edged sword that cuts two ways. It may increase public interest in antiques. It may result in preservation of some things that should not be lost. On the other hand it may result in exaggerated valuations placed by part of the public on near junk simply because it is old. Search by true collectors may be helped and may be hurt by this outburst of public interest sparked by finding of an old master in a collection of merely old stuff.

Reminiscences 1931-1956

A MESSAGE FROM THE PUBLISHER — March, 1931

We extract the following from the page of O. C. Lightner in the March, 1931, issue:

"We are entering into the venture of HOBBIES as a hobby of our own. We are almost sentimental enough to say that it is the fulfillment of a dream. For six years we have been gathering material and visualizing the magazine that now blossoms forth. Naturally our readers are going to wonder who we are, why we are doing it and what it is all about.

"We are magazine publishers of long standing: we publish very successful magazines in highly specialized fields running up to 300 pages a month. (Mr. Lightner later sold all of these trade publications in order to put all his energies into HOBBIES, to which he became avidly devoted).

"We have capital, experience and facilities to make a success of this new undertaking.

*****

"We wanted to say this about ourselves, because so many other magazines along similar lines have bobbed up now and then and have been short-lived. We want to establish a thorough confidence in the minds of our readers that at last a real publishing house has gotten behind the magazine for which there is a crying need. We will let our first issue speak for itself, although we admit it is very crude in comparison to what we intend to make it. We do not want to start big and drop down, we want to start small and grow larger. As a nucleus of what we plan to do we have purchased the "Philatelic West" known to collectors for thirty-five years, from the venerable publisher, L. T. Brodstone. The "Philatelic West" had already absorbed the "Collectors World" and several other similar magazines.

"Our idea is to publish such a magazine as will get most everyone interested in some kind of a collection hobby. We will do more than has ever been done to bring new blood into the collecting industry. We will have departments for each of the principal hobbies, so that the reader may turn first to his favorite hobby and then feast himself on the delectable news of other folks' hobbies.

"We will not in any sense cover sport or personal hobbies of any kind; the book is primarily a collectors' magazine, and we will cover only collectors' hobbies. We want the enthusiastic help of every reader to make HOBBIES an outstanding magazine of national importance. It is surprising how many prominent men and women are already on the subscription lists of the magazines we have purchased. With the effort we are putting behind it, no reader need feel backward about recommending it to any collector or prospective collector within the scope of his or her acquaintance.

"I will have a message for you each month, and as I travel a great deal, I will meet you face to face from time to time. We plan to organize hobby clubs and promote hobby shows to stimulate collecting.

"Certainly we are pleased with the prospects. Let us all work together to make the magazine a credit to the wonderful field it covers."

—O. C. LIGHTNER

1931 - 1956

Throughout the 98 pages of the first issue, which was in the small page format, ideas for stimulating the joys of collecting were given. On the last page of that pioneer issue, Mr. Lightner ran an ad. It read:

"THIS IS THE END. YOU HAVE READ HOBBIES. DO ONE OF THREE THINGS . . . 1. SUBSCRIBE; 2. RENEW YOUR SUBSCRIPTION; 3. GET YOUR FELLOW-COLLECTORS TO SUBSCRIBE."

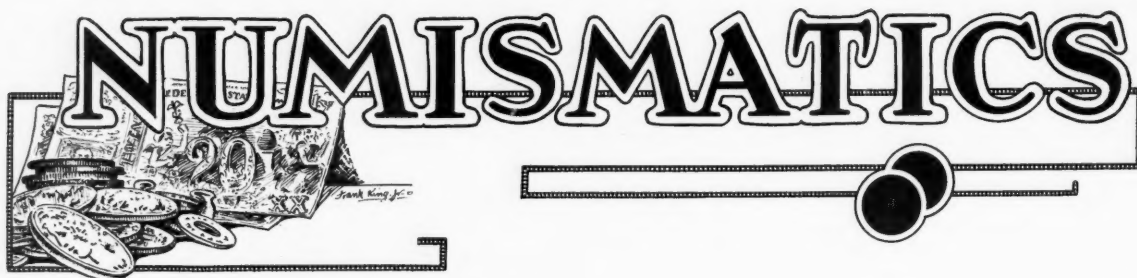

You, who were with us in those days, know that it was no voice crying in the wilderness. Collectors and dealers were quick to support the cause, and hobby clubs sprang up in increasing numbers throughout the country, with memberships ranging from a dozen or more to the two or three thousand size. Many collectors followed their hobby so avidly that eventually they were moved to open shops combining their hobby with a business. Much has been preserved by these devoted collectors and dealers that otherwise would have been destroyed.

Obviously, much has been accomplished in this span of years since March, 1931, by collectors and dealers.

HOBBIES is happy in the knowledge that it has been privileged to act as a sounding board for their news, their thoughts, their opinions, their dreams, as it enters its silver anniversary year (March, 1956 through February, 1957). Mr. Lightner's words in the March, 1931, issue, seem prophetic for the anniversary year:

"Certainly we are pleased with the prospects. Let's all work together to make the magazine a credit to the wonderful field it covers."

If we may offer our dream for the year, it is this: "When we wind up the anniversary year that we may have garnered in 50,000 more readers." Where will these new friends come from? From people in the better walks of life who are potential collectors, executives, professional men and women, educators, business men and women, etc., in fact, young and old everywhere who have an appreciation of arts and history.

COIN QUIZ

By CHARLES FRENCH

Coin questions answered gratis. If you wish reply by mail, enclose 10c to defray costs. Do not mail us coins in question, please.

Question:

Could you please give the value and country of the following coin: Front, Petrus I.D. G. (a few letters worn off) El. Perp. Bras. Det. 1827. Wreath with surcharged 20 in center of coin, no doubt done later than originally minted. Back, In Hoc Signo Vinces, crown over shield, surcharge on front shows on back, sprig of leaves on each side of shield, crown looks very much Hungarian or Roumanian. Copper, fair condition. Also please give me the value of the following: (1) Mexican, good condition, on front 8 R. G. 1840 P.J. 10 D 20 G, Liberty cap and rays. On back Mexican eagle and Republica Mexicana. I cannot tell the content. At first I thought it was a silver dollar but it has a yellow cast not as definite though as gold. Is it a dollar? (2) Great Britain, Victoria, 1841, one shilling, very good.

—E. A. L., Ohio

Answer:

The copper coin is a counter-stamped 20 Reis coin of Brazil valued at 25¢; the other is a Mexican 8 Real coin of silver valued at $1., if it is yellow, it most likely is a counterfeit. The shilling is worth 20¢.

—C. F., New York

Question:

Will you please give me some information on a six shilling note issued in Delaware in 1776, also the value. Six shilling note No. 93869. This — bill according to the General Assembly of the counties of Newcastle, Kent and Sussex in the 15th year of the reign of King George the Third. Dated first day of June 1776. Signed Visu B. Manlove. Printed by James Adams 1776. To counterfeit is death. Note in perfect condition. On reverse side is a square — is a sheaf of wheat. There is other printing on same side as the sheaf of wheat.

—J. McK., Maryland choose them at any particular time?

Answer:

Your colonial 6 shilling note of Delaware in fine condition is worth $1. If it was like new it would be worth more.

Question:

Will you please tell me value of the following coins: (1) 1835 Liberty Head penny about size of modern silver quarter. "Liberty" engraved on head of figure; wreath and U. S. of America on other side. (2) Silver Dollar, 1897, new condition.

—Mrs J. M. S., Connecticut

Answer:

The 1835 cent is worth 50¢ in fine condition. The 1897 dollar is worth face value only.

Question:

As Numismatic Dealers, I thought you might be interested in a bill I have in my possession. If of no interest to you, I would appreciate it if you could tell me of just what value it is. It is an United States Fractional Currency Fifteen Cent Bill. It states—"Act Approved March 31, 1863. Furnished only by the Assistant Treasurers and Designated Depositories of the United States. John Allison, Register; S. E. Spinner, Treasurer; National Bank Note Co., New York."

—Mrs. G. W. C., S. Dakota

Answer:

The note you have is only worth an appreciable premium if it is in crisp new unfolded condition.

—C. F., New York

Question:

I would like to find out some information about the various insignia that go on coins. Who chooses these insignia and how do they happen to

I am especially interested in the buffalo and Indian on the so-called Buffalo Nickel.

—T. W., Jr., Mass.

Answer:

Regulations are such that the designs on coins cannot be changed more frequently than every twenty-five years.

When a new design is considered, the Coinage Committee requests that designs be submitted for consideration. In due time the committee chooses one of these designs and this ultimately becomes the new coin.

With regards to the Buffalo Nickel, James E. Fraser was the successful designer of this coin and he employed three different Indians as models for the obverse. The Bison was modeled after "Black Diamond" in the New York Zoological gardens.

Question:

Will you please evaluate this item of paper currency. "One Sixth of a Dollar. Printed by Hall and Sellers in Philadelphia, 1776. # 23350. One Sixth of a Dollar According to a Resolution of Congress Passed at Philadelphia, February 17, 1776, Fred Kiehl.

—E. G. D., Penna.

Answer:

The value of your paper currency is about 50¢ in good condition.

Question:

Enclosed find a rubbing of a German 5 Mark coin in very fine condition. I tried to use same for a purchase. The storekeeper would not accept it. Claims he never saw one before. Made inquiries and understand only 150 coins like it were made. Please give me any information pertinent to said coin and value of same.

—D. F. A., N. Y.

Answer:

I do not know the quantity coined but it more than likely is more than a small quantity. It is a recent coinage and worth about $2.50.

Question:

I have read your Coin Quiz in HOBBIES and would be pleased if you could give me the value of the following currency and coins: 4 New York Safety Fund bills, July 4, 1837; (1) 5193, 12½¢, fair; (2) #5536, 25¢ fair; (3) 1852, 37½¢ fair; (4) 3583, 50¢, fair. United States March 3, 1863 (Geo. Washington) 3¢, good. United States Series of 1874 (Robert J. Walker) 25¢, good. Silver Dollar 1878 CC, fine, Morgan good. Silver Dollar 1881 CC E, fine, good. Silver Dollar 1904 E, fine, Morgan. Silver Dollar 1934 S good, Peace.

—W. F. K., Ill.

Answer:

Your Safety Fund bills are worth about 25¢ each, the 3¢ Washington 15¢, and the 25¢ Walker 35¢. No premium on the silver dollars except the 1934 S Peace which is worth $3.

Question:

Could you tell me the value of the following coins and what place or country they come from? (1) 24 Einen Thaler 1764. Around the edge on one side reads CCXX Eine feine maker. On the other side is, as near as I can tell, I ridarac-s D. C. Sante elector, and at the bottom is B.D.C. There is a shield in the center that is a circle in two halves with two swords crossed on one side and lines on the other. I made some rubbings. They're not very good. (2) One coin which on one side reads Republica De Bolivia, and in the center is a picture of a mountain, a goat and other things. On the other side on the edge are the words La Union Es La Fuceza 1951, in the center is Un Boliviano 1. (3) This coin has 15 stars on one side and 1945. In the center is 50 para. On the other side are nine stars and I couldn't read the writing so I tried to write it like it was on the coin—JYPOC—ABUJA. (4) One Liberty Head nickel 1912.

—Miss M. C. B., Ore.

Answer:

Your 1764, 24th Thaler Germany is worth 50¢; 1951 one Boliviano $1; 50 Kopeks Russia 25¢; 1912 Liberty Head nickel face value.

Question:

Could you possibly tell me the difference between a "U.S. Mint Set" and the "U.S. Brilliant Proof Set?" Also, if I wanted to obtain these sets from the U.S. Mint or Treasurer, just how would I go about getting them directly from the government and are there any difficulties in obtaining same? The address if you have it, please.

I have in my possession a $10.00 Federal Reserve note with picture of Jackson, to the left a Black Seal, The Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, Missouri, in center 10-J Series of 1914 10 JD, Authorized by the Federal Reserve Act of December 23, 1913. Serial number is 10J J2958456 Signed John Burke, Treasurer of the United States, and to the right Washington, D. C., W. J. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, and a blue seal much larger than our current seal. The bill itself is much larger than current one. It is in excellent condition. Also would like to know if the bearer can actually demand $10.00 in gold as so stated on the other side of the bill.

Also have a $1.00 bill silver certificate Q51251603A. N. O. Woods, Treasurer of the United States. Blue seal on the left. Series 1923 A. Q512-1603 A. On the right side of bill ONE Washington, D. C., A. W.

coins, one coin of each denomination from all of the three mints, Philadelphia, San Francisco and Denver. The 1954 set would consist of 15 pieces.

A Proof Set is a specially made set of coins by the Philadelphia Mint, only carefully struck with polished dies and polished planchets, perfect pieces with a high mirror-like finish.

U.S. Mint Sets are available during the year of issue only for the first three months of the year i.e., one can secure a complete set of 1954 coins (sold in lots of two sets) from January 1955 to April 1, 1955. The cost at that time is face plus a nominal shipping and packing charge. These are obtainable at the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

Proof Sets are secured by writing the United States Mint, att. Superintendent, and any number of sets can be secured during the year of issue at $2.10 per set.

Gold Notes are no longer redeemable in gold and are supposed to be turned in at face value to the government. None of the bills you mention are worth a premium unless they are in crisp new unfolded condition.

The German coin is of little or no value.

AUTOGRAPHS

Letters of Artists

By DORIS H. HAMILTON

How would you like to read about a famous artist planning the composition of his masterpiece? How would you like to have an artist's sketch in a letter to a friend — in between the gossip and the philosophy? How would you like to have an artist's impressions of some of the people he has painted? If you are interested in art and artists, then let us take a look at the autographs in this field.

Fortunately, from the purchaser's point of view, there are not too many collectors of artists' autographs.

While art museums are filled to capacity on Saturdays and Sundays, while art books are having an unprecedented sale, and while paintings are bringing record prices, there is not a great demand for the letters of artists themselves.

Today it is popular to collect letters of scientists, letters with solid historical contents, letters of musicians, just to mention a few of the more popular fields. Here the demand seems to exceed the supply. However, with artists it is another matter and this is surprising when you realize that many artists are as expressive with their pens as they are with their brushes.

There are, of course, exceptions. Letters of the Old Masters — Rembrandt, Rubens, Titian — all bring prices which are akin to their importance in the world of art. There isn't even any record of the sale of their letters at auction in the United States for the period 1945-50.

Letters of the New Masters usually bring high prices in the autograph market if the artist's paintings command substantial prices at the galleries. Letters of Van Gogh, Cezanne, Matisse, and Picasso excite great interest and bring great prices. Among the American artists Howard Pyle, Frederic Remington, and Charlie Russell bring substantial prices. Nevertheless, letters of artists who have firm positions in the world of art but who are not currently in vogue can be purchased for very reasonable sums. Here is an opportunity for the collector to get some high-powered material at low prices.

Among the various types of artists' letters on the market are those describing the artist's own paintings. This sort of letter is just as desirable as one of an author diagnosing the characters of his latest novel. Here is an extremely rare letter of Albert Ryder (opposite page):

New Rochelle Westchule Collg
May 2 '90

My dear Schell -

There is a gentleman friend of mine who desires to look at the "horse paintings" which I have handed in to you with a view to purchasing one - I thought if you sent them to Kurtz he could see them there but if you do not send them to Kurtz and if they are photo'd elsewhere as I presume they may be where can he see them? Answer quickly and if he can see them tell me how when & where. Without Oblige

Yours

Fredrick Remington

The Artist of the West mentions his "horse paintings."

"My dear Mr. Clarke,

"Many thanks for your kind remembrance of the fourth hundred for the Temple of the Mind. So sorry not to have seen you as I think you may have brought it personally.

"I am in ecstasys over my Jonah! Such a lovely turmoil of boiling water and everything. Don't you think we should try and get it in the A.A.A. if I get the scheme of color that haunts me! I think you will be delighted with it.

"Good Bye till I see you

"Sincerely yours,
"A. P. Ryder"

The letters of Vincent Van Gogh are strictly upper bracket and beyond the reach of most collectors. Since there are no Van Gogh letters on the market, or next to none, I believe that an art autograph collector would enjoy reading Van Gogh's Letters to Emile Bernard (Museum of Modern Art, 1938). These letters abound in discussion of color, composition, and creativeness.

Letters of artists about art often present an unusual critical point of view. Although it is said that actors cannot judge a play, I don't believe it should follow that artists cannot judge a painting.

In an extremely interesting letter from 51 Rue Blanche (no date), Georges Rouault discusses art and the Mona Lisa. He writes: "... People have seen in the Mona Lisa's smile so much mystery that it would be difficult without seeming a little singular to say that it hasn't any."

He then mentions the "tender and powerful talent of Da Vinci (and) ... the somber and poignant genius of Rembrandt ... true individuality mortally wounds routine ideas and formulae." In the balance of the letter Rouault reviews in detail the relationship of a great artist with his age and with all time.

An artist's letter with an illustration or sketch is a choice item for display. Incorporated in the letter, the sketch makes no claim to being a finished piece of art, yet letters with sketches furnish a relatively inexpensive form in which to have work of a favorite artist.

I recently saw a letter of George Morland, declining a dinner invitation and including, as if to make amends, a sketch of one of his famous dogs. In a note written by Edward Gordon Craig, he transformed a slip of the pen into a landscape. He was so pleased with the trees and bushes which he scratched in to cover the blot that he called attention to his original error. Howard Pyle would sign his name — after he had obligingly drawn in one of his murderous pirates, preferably with a black patch over one eye and a knife clenched between his teeth!

Another advantage to collecting artists' letters is that they are an excellent source for personal anecdotes. Whether portrait painters or landscape painters, the artist is in a position to meet other interesting people.

Sir Joshua Reynolds' portrait of Mrs. Siddons is an eloquent tribute to "The Tenth Muse" and Sir Joshua inscribed his name on Mrs. Siddons skirt hem, saying that thus would he attain immortality. Benjamin Haydon, famous painter of the Romantic Age, has given us one of the liveliest records extant of the great literary men of his day: Charles Lamb, William Wordsworth, and Samuel Coleridge.

Skipping in time from the Romantic Age to shortly before World War I, we find a brief note which is eloquent, at least, in showing Rodin's interest in other dancers besides Isadora Duncan. Written by Loie Fuller and signed "Auguste Rodin, Meudon", the note, dated 29, July 1916, reads, in not the best French:

"Cher Amie:

"Donner tout votre appui a Loie Fuller pour le realization des Musee Francais en Amerique. Travaille avec elle. J'ai confiance en vous et votre amitie pour moi et pour mes oeuvres."

Among the letters which are on my desk is one, undated, of Rosa Bonheur. The initials "RB" are embossed at the top of the letter. The artist of Horse Fair writes:

"Monsieur the Count,

"I have the honor to inform you that I am putting the last touches to two large landscapes, slated for the Exposition. I dare not hope that you can find a moment to come to see them, but the favors that you have already granted me embolden me to make this request. My paintings are at my studio, 50, rue de l'Ouest until Thursday morning.

"Please accept, Monsieur the Count, the heart-felt expression of the highest consideration of your devoted and obedient servant.

M. R. Bonheur"

Also on my desk is a letter of one of the most popular and most collected of American illustrators, and artists: Frederic Remington. On May 2, 1890, Remington writes:

"My dear Schell—

"There is a gentleman friend of mine who desires to look at the "horse paintings" which I have handed in to you with a view to purchasing one — I thought if you sent them to Kurtz he could see them there but if you do not send them to Kurtz and if they are photoed elsewhere as I presume they may be where can he see them? Answer quickly and if he can see them tell me how when and where. Noblesse Oblige.

"Yours

"Frederic Remington"

As a field where excellent material can be obtained at very moderate prices, collecting letters of artists is extremely rewarding.

James Gates Percival

[1795-1856]

By RAYMOND J. WALKER

Among the many American poets of the last century who have been lost in the shuffle of time is James Gates Percival. Of him, Robert Treat Paine in his "Literature of the Nineteenth Century" wrote, "The first poet in America, by the rule of Horace, 'poeta nascitur non fit', is James G. Percival. He was born one. He would have been a poet under any circumstances, - born anywhere, bred in any manner. He has not written any one thing equal to the 'Evening Wind' by Bryant, but his birth right lies a thousand leagues higher up Parnassus. . . . Percival is the most interesting man in America. Had he been born in any country of Europe, he would have had fame and fortune thrust upon him, which he wants the confidence to pluck down upon himself."

Percival died about a century ago and for most people his name and fame is preserved in two quotations in Bartlett's "Familiar Quotations," one from "New England" and the other the first stanza of "To Seneca Lake." He was known as a "genius" in his time and a man who could do many things.

James Gates Percival, American poet, philologist, geologist, chemist and surgeon, was born in Berlin, Connecticut, on September 15, 1795. Few Americans have been so versatile or so eager in the acquisition of learning. He was a graduate of Yale, a practicing physician, an editor, a linguist who knew ten languages and did important work on Webster's "Dictionary," a prolific poet, assistant surgeon and lecturer on chemistry at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., a botanist, state geologist of Connecticut (1833-44) and of Wisconsin from 1854 until his death at Hazel Green, May 2, 1856.

Percival graduated from Yale in 1815 and received his medical degree in 1820. In 1821, he published "Poems" at New Haven. This volume contained the first part of his "Prometheus," a long poem in the Spenserian stanza. In 1822, he published his Oration delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Yale College and the second part of his "Prometheus." In the same year, he had published at Charleston, S.C., the first number of "Clio," a pamphlet of about 100 pages, consisting principally of verse, which was soon followed by a second part, entirely in verse. This work was republished at New Haven later in the same year. In 1823, he published a collection of his poems at New York which were republished in London in two volumes.

In 1824, Percival was appointed a surgeon in the U. S. Army and assigned to the Military Academy at West Point as Professor of chemistry. He soon resigned his professorship and was assigned to duty as a surgeon at Boston. While there he contributed to the United States Literary Gazette and edited several works for the press including Knox's "Extracts and Epistles."

Percival published his poem, "The Maid" which was delivered before the Alpha of the Connecticut Phi Beta Kappa Society, Sept. 13, 1825. In 1827, he returned to New Haven and in that year published the third part of "Clio" at New York, and worked on a revision of Malte-Brun's Geography, which he completed in 1832 and published in 1834. In 1827 and 1828, he assisted in the preparation of the first half, especially the scientific words, of the 1828 edition of Noah Webster's "Dictionary of the English Language." He later helped Goodrich in revising the edition of 1847.

In 1835, with Prof. Charles D. Shepard, he made a mineralogical and geological survey of the state of Connecticut, the report of which was published in 1842. From 1841 to 1844, he contributed a number of metrical versions of German, Slavonic and other lyrics accompanied by critical and explanatory essays to the New Haven newspapers, and in 1843, published "The Dream of A Day and Other Poems," at New Haven.

In 1853, Percival was engaged by the American Mining Co., to survey their lead mining lands in Wisconsin, and in the following year was appointed state geologist for Wisconsin. His report was published in 1855. His complete poetical works, with a biographical sketch by L. W. Fitch, were published in two volumes at Boston in 1859.

In a review of this work H. T. Tuckerman wrote: "The 'New England,' 'Coral Grove,' 'Seneca Lake' and other popular lyrics of Percival have endeared his muse to more than one generation; but the sympathetic reader, upon examining the two 'blue and gold' volumes just published by Ticknor & Fields, will find a love of nature as scientific as it is ideal, an invention in metrical skill as rare as it is attractive, a tenderness and reflection, a classical discipline and an American tone, a copious, versatile, eloquent fancy, language and sentiment, which will gain a critical rank for Percival, which, to those unfamiliar with his collected writings, will prove an agreeable surprise."

It was one of the favorite plans of Percival to imitate in English all known meters in all accessible languages from the Sanscrit downwards. He had versified in 13 languages and had imitated all the Greek and German meters. He translated Homer just for the improvement of his style.

Even in his early work of "Clio", the Rev. Samuel Gillman observed, in every part of these volumes proofs of a very extensive and profound knowledge. He had an almost encyclopedian familiarity with subjects in many departments of science. Percival accumulated a library of 10,000 volumes, which his estate offered as a lot at $20,000. The library was finally broken up and sold in lots by the firm of Leonard & Co., at Boston in 1860.

As early as 1821, Edward Everett wrote of Percival's poems saying that they contained the marks of an inspiration more lofty and genuine than any other similar collection of fugitive pieces which had come to his (Everett's) notice from a native bard.

The London Monthly review, while strongly condemning "the startling and terrific pictures of a powerful but fevered imagination, of contempt and hatred of mankind, etc., which disfigures some of the pages of his first collection," characterizes his "Prometheus" as "abounding in splendid and fanciful passages," and, after citing long extracts as evidence of this assertion remarks: "If the muse of the New World continues to rank among her votaries poets who can produce lines equal and superior to the preceding she will not long have to repine at the fame of those older nations."

from England and elsewhere, including Chaucer's Canterbury Tales printed by Caxton, England's first printer; and Robert Burns' manuscripts including Auld Lang Syne. First printings of Greek and Latin classics are represented, as are French and German authors, and such contemporary scientists as Albert Einstein.

This is a great collection, and the Americana books especially will keep American traditions alive for future Americans.

Americana Enthusiast

Robert Cromie, in a column in The Chicago Tribune, tells of his wife's addiction to "things past," including books bearing such titles as With Lee in Virginia, and the Life and Deeds of General Sherman. "We now have about a dozen shelves of Civil War books, pamphlets, dealers' catalogs, clippings and other memorabilia," he writes, "and my golf collection—a mere necessary handful of 500 or so bound volumes, is in danger of being crowded into the attic." Like the proverbial camel, once the Americana hobby sticks its nose in the window, it is soon taking over the house. You can't stop progress—nor the Americana enthusiast.

INDIAN RELICS

INDIAN ARROWHEADS

Their Supply & Demand

By HOMER P. MACNAMARA, M.D.

Folsom culture Indians were present in America 24,000 years ago according to recent studies made with carbon 14. We do not know that Folsom man was the first who made arrow and spear heads in America. We do know that Folsom points, which were first thought to be native only to New Mexico, have more recently been found over large sections of western United States and up into Alaska.

There is scarcely any area in North America in which the Indian has not lived or hunted, so for at least 24,000 years the American Indian has been making projectile points out of stone. There is no way of knowing what the Indian population of North America was at any given time. An estimation, all that is possible, is that there were a million Indians in America when the white man first arrived.

Though the Indian found it easier to make arrow and spear points out of metals brought in by the white man, for a period of at least 400 years after Columbus most Indian weapons were still made by chipping stone. So for many centuries many Indians have been making, using and losing, or burying arrowheads.

It is impossible to estimate the number of arrowheads in collections, or still to be found. Safe to say, all that are picked up or dug up in the future will be saved by collectors or museums. The supply can only be estimated.

A few years ago nearly every farm home had a few arrowheads put away in a shoe box or on a shelf just because "We found these on our own farm." Now, with advertisements to buy appearing in every hobby and outdoor magazine, the farm home supply is nearly depleted. The supply is in the hands of collectors, dealers and museums.

Some burial finds may be made in the future, but the day when one could walk through the fields and pick up arrowheads is almost past. Unrooting of forests and tillage of fields have done away with surface finds. Nearly every state has laws prohibiting indiscriminate digging into mounds or burial sites by amateurs or collectors. The supply at this point is nearly static.

Demand, however, is growing by leaps and bounds. Hugh C. Rogers of Ft. Smith, Arkansas, estimates that there are 8,000 private Indian implement collections in the United States. As a hobby it is probably next to philately. Nearly every collector of Indian relics has some arrowheads and wants more.

HOBBIES for October carries advertisements of 17 dealers, and we know of several dealers who are not listed there. Some of these dealers are unloading years of accumulation. Others buy collections of any size for resale.

We know of one dealer who travels throughout the country with a trailer behind his car. The trailer is fitted with drawers and shelves for transportation of anything he can buy as he travels from town to town and farm to farm. Most dealers advertise their wants, then go with a car or small truck to pick up what they can get at a price that will give them a fair profit.

This writer started buying Indian arrowheads about six years ago. At that time very good mixed material could be bought for $25.00 per hundred. Now it is impossible to get really good arrowheads for less than $35.00 per hundred. Select pieces frequently cost $2.00 to $3.00 or more each.

In connection with supply, a beginner should buy in small numbers until he knows and is known by the man he is buying from. Many modern made arrowheads are on the market. Much of what is offered for sale to tourists is modern machine made. These are Indian arrowheads, but they are not what the Indian arrowhead collector wants or should spend his money on.

An honest dealer will not try to sell modern made arrowheads except under that label. An occasional piece in a large buy cannot always be detected, but when a dealer offers to sell 50 or 100 or more, all of the same stone, and all perfect in outline and finish, without dent or chipped areas, suspect and refuse them.

Most large cities, many states, and all large universities have museums. Nearly every museum has a section devoted to Indians and their weapons. All are looking for gifts, or for a chance to buy genuine material to add to these displays. The number of museums will probably increase. The number of serious collectors will increase. The number of authentic war points cannot increase.

The supply is limited. The demand is great, and the interest is increasing daily.

THE ANGOSTURA POINT

Human beings have lived in the northern Missouri Basin for at least 7,000 years. The prehistoric people presumably of the same type physically as living Plains Indians—passed through many cultural changes due to migrations, variations in climate, perhaps major wars. They were, at various periods, hunters, farmers, food gatherers. Sometimes they combined all three ways of life.

This lost chapter of history is being tentatively reconstructed from the surveys and excavations carried out under the River Basins Surveys project of the Smithsonian Institution and various Federal and State cooperating agencies. A large number of archeological sites, eventually to be flooded under the Federal Government's river development program, have been investigated in order to salvage scientific material of value.

In the course of this archeological work, evidences of what apparently was an early human occupancy of the area were found in the basin of the Angostura Reservoir of the Cheyenne River in South Dakota. This site apparently was occupied by a quite primitive hunting people, the characteristic of whose culture was a peculiarly shaped javelin point. Carbon-14 dates from the site indicate an age of human occupancy of roughly 7,000 to 7,700 years. At other sites a somewhat differently shaped but related type of point was found associated with bones of an extinct variety of bison, but no carbon dates were obtainable. The typical Angostura point was not associated with identifiable animal bones at the South Dakota locality but has been found elsewhere with bones of extant animals.

Eventually, it is hoped, the surveys and excavations will make possible reconstruction of the millenniums of history of the Great Plains region before the earliest white explorations.

Notes on Primitive Weapons of Australia

While a certain uniformity existed in culture and weapons among the tribes of Australia, the comparative taboos and restrictions imposed by the tribes on traveling resulted in types distinct to certain areas. The tendency was thus that, except for some trading between tribes, weapons were very much of a special type for the area, and little overlapping resulted. Outside contacts did occur, and the Malay traders and people from New Guinea brought in weapons, such as the bow and arrow, which were adopted by the aborigines.

Metal was little used. These people were still living in the Stone Age, so stone found much use. Stone made spearheads, axes, gouges, knives and scrapers.

The spearheads were slender, leaf-shaped, sharply pointed, and had finely serrated edges. They were fastened to their shafts with gum, sinews, or wedging. Stone axes were made by fitting the stone into a pliable branch or piece of wood, binding with kangaroo sinews, and further fastening with gum or pitch. Knives were made by hand-flaking stone.

Many fine weapons were entirely of wood, the finest of these being spears, spear-throwers, clubs, boomerangs and shields. The natives of Ashburton in northwestern part of the continent made the most elaborate spears. The points had elaborately carved barbs.

Shields were of two types, thick, narrow ones used for warding off blows by clubs; and broad ones for intercepting thrown or missile weapons such as the boomerang or spear. Spear throwers were made of wood. Their main purpose was to give range and precision. The spear-thrower was a flat piece with appropriate hand or finger holds; at the rear end was a peg of wood, or sometimes an animal tooth. Spears used in throwing quite often bore a slight hollowed butt for the reception of the peg.

Boomerangs varied considerably in size and shape. The returning boomerangs were made primarily for amusement and were only occasionally used for hunting. These were twisted so the two ends were in slightly different planes. In use they showed a rotary movement, then a collapse (apparent), after which the weapon turned in the air and returned to its thrower.

Boomerangs of the non-returning type were useful in hunting, were flat and had clean sharp edges. The curvature of these varied.

Hard wooden clubs, both for close combat and for throwing, were made.

BRIEFS

Antique gun collectors in Missouri received a ruling from attorney general John M. Dalton making it illegal for them to buy an old weapon unless it carried maker's name and a serial number. Sad to say, most old guns were made before serial numbers were used.

Utilizing something of the appearance, if not much of the mechanism, is the new 20MM "Gatling Gun" and the 30MM "Revolver" aircraft cannon recently tested at the Armament Test Center at the Elgin Air Force Base. Engineers and representatives of the Springfield Armory, Buffalo Arms Company and others were at hand.

The English author, Keith Neal has just published another fine book, this one on Spanish Weapons. This is entitled Spanish Guns and Pistols and will undoubtedly be available through American book dealers. For those of you who can't wait, try writing to the publishers at G. Bell & Sons, Ltd., York House, Portugal Street, London, W.C. 2, England. This work is illustrated with ninety-nine photographs, mostly of weapons in Neal's own superb collection. It covers the period of 1650-1850 in Spanish Arms Making, one of especial interest, but one comparatively unknown here. Appearing in page size of 9 3/4 x 6 1/2 inches, bound in cloth, it sells for $6.00.

* * *

The finest thing ever to come out of an arms collector's association is the Bulletin No. 1 issued in September by the American Society of Arms Collectors. In 27 pages are important articles on the Lindsay Pistols by Sam E. Smith, who is considered the top authority on this subject and an important article on patent models of pistols and a very interesting introduction in the article which explains the patent system in its origin in England in 1623; this by Thomas J. McHugh. Both of these are profusely illustrated with broadsides, photographs and patent issuances and constitute an important addition to the researcher's library. There are some seven pages of membership listings.

One of the cheaper sporting arms produced by Germany just a few years after World War II is this 22 caliber carbine style shotgun. A very compact, light, and cheaply made arm, this was capable of handling the short, long, and long rifle shot cartridges, a type of only very incidental use in this country. Manufactured by A. G. Kohler of Berlin, this weighs four pounds and ten ounces, has an overall length of 34 inches and has a stock of beechwood colored with walnut stain. Not an antique, but of interest just the same.

George W. Meighan, book dealer of Dover, N. J., has just issued "12 attractive prints with 37 different illustrations of official uniforms worn by the Army and Navy of the Confederate States." They are made from rare historical documents, and are ready to frame. Size 8½ x 11, $2.00 postpaid.

Norman Newton Ltd., 124 New Bond Street, London, W.1 has just issued a new catalog which covers their recent acquisition of the Charles C. Stadden Miniatures. Collectors of military miniaturia and of military material in general might do well to contact this firm.

We're too often prone to think of the private arms trade as being something done by evil men around the time of World War I; and we're also prone to think that such nasty things aren't being done anymore. But it might surprise you to learn that the arms trade, with certain State Department sanction and license, is still in full swing. One firm which operates under the non-committal name of the Phoenix International Co. sells regularly to the far East with such customers as the Egyptians and Syrians. Items such as British Sten Guns and German machine guns have been suggested for sale to these on the theory that Israeli ammunition could be captured and used in these guns against them.

We don't hear much about the arms trade because the State Department, for reasons best known to itself, chooses to keep such dealings quiet, and since these deals must be known to this government agency by regulation are done with their approval. All the regulations and secrecy stem from the time of the Spanish Civil War in 1935 when we supplied arms to Franco and didn't want our public to know about it. Then with the neutrality act shipments were prohibited. All dealings since that time have generally been kept out of the public eye though it is within the power of Congress to have such dealings and the figures made public.

In most machine shops one of the biggest difficulties experienced by many machinists is the disposal of pieces of work they've ruined. This is no less true in the arms making industry and was brought to light very forcefully when company canals which run alongside the machine shops of the Enfield Works, Enfield, England, were drained recently to allow for repairs. In the ooze in the bottom of the canal in an almost classical archaeological strata were parts for all the models made at the Enfield Small arms works. On top were almost shiny parts for the latest British Short Enfield Rifle, below that, parts for the Model 1914, further down Lee-Metfords, Lee-Martini, Lee-Enfields, right down to the first models, and of course all in progressively greater state of disintegration. In the past 3-5 generations of workers at the arms works an awful lot of them had found the canals an easy disposal place for their poor pieces of work, which was thrown out of the windows into the canals. What an archaeologists delight several hundred years from now.

The Picture POST CARD

Louise Collins Elliott

RECEIVES RECOGNITION

From an article in the Fort Myers, Fla., News Press

By RUFÉ DAUGHTREY

A leading international authority among collectors of rare and valuable picture postcards is a Fort Myers High School English teacher, Mrs. Louise Collins Elliott.

Mrs. Elliott is editor of the postcard department of the monthly HOBBIES magazine which is the leading journal in the field of collection with a world wide circulation.

By telephone, telegraph and mail, writing under her maiden name of Louise Collins, Mrs. Elliott does the job of editing in her spare time, with an office in her home at 2013 High Street.

In this office she has her own collection of 50,000 postcards, filed and cross filed in such a way that she can find any item in a matter of seconds.

One Has A Million

Many collectors have more cards than she—one has a million, another 800,000—but hers is a highly selective file. Each card is either rare, valuable, or of unusual interest, or illustrative of a type or period.

She has old fashioned cards from the gay '90's; cards by great artists; cards that are photographs of famous people and places; cards that are loaded with lace, silks and fancy ribbons; cards memorializing historic events; cards dedicated to such immortals as Shakespeare and Longfellow.

"The cards are a great help in my literature classes at school," said Mrs. Elliott. "There is scarcely a topic that arises that I cannot illustrate with postcards from my files."

"I pin them on the bulletin board and the students find them fascinating—and definitely stimulating of interest in the topic under study. The boys and girls from other classes come in during off hours to look at them."

Gets Heavy Mail

Interest is equally keen among collectors and amateurs all over the world. Her mail is terrific. She gets a minimum of 10 letters a day asking about different cards that have been found. In addition she gets nearly as many gift cards from fans every day.

Letters come from every state, from Canada and Mexico, from all over South America, Japan, China, all of the countries of Europe—even one now and then from Russia.

Postcard collecting is particularly popular in Austria and Germany, but is also widespread in Denmark, Sweden, England and France.

Mrs. Elliott has even received letters from collectors in semi-civilized tribes of Africa. One native sent her a rare item and appended a query as to whether she might not send him a return gift of a pair of pants.

Another tribesman, grateful for the gift of a much wanted postcard, sent her a packaged present of a clutch of alligator eggs—which were in an advanced state of deterioration and odor when they arrived.

Mrs. Elliott started saving postcards when she was a small girl but didn't make it a serious hobby until 15 years ago.

She began studying this big field with such zeal that she soon became an expert. She started contributing articles to the HOBBIES magazine postcard department which so impressed the magazine that six years ago she was given the position of editor of the department.

She writes and edits articles on new and different cards, selects cards to make up a page of pictures each month, and answers questions from collectors. She also sells articles to other magazines.

Originally from Warrior, Ala., Mrs. Elliott holds a master's degree in English from Birmingham Southern College and has done additional graduate work at Duke University and the University of Florida.

Mrs. Elliott is an accomplished musician. She has been educated in music at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, at Birmingham Conservatory of Music, and at Athens, Ala., College. After graduating, she served for a time as teacher of piano and harmony at the Birmingham conservatory.

She is still active in music and for several years has been organist at the Christian Science Church, although not a member of the church.

During World War II she volunteered for service in the Woman's Army Corps and was assigned to Army Intelligence with the rank of corporal.

In 1947 she came to Fort Myers to take a position as English and literature teacher in the high school and has lived here ever since.

"I expect to make Fort Myers my home from now on," she said. "I love it here."

Mrs. Elliott says that greeting cards date back into antiquity but that postcards as a governmental mail institution were first accepted by Austria in 1869 and by the United States in 1898. Before 1898, postcards in the United States went by letter rate.

She says that postcards have never attained the high values that are attached by collectors to rare stamps. A price of $2 or $3 is considered high for postcards, she says.

Of all her cards she has no one in particular which she values most, but one which she treasures is a postcard photo of Ellen Terry autographed by that famous English actress.

* She has many novelty cards, such as paintings of beautiful girls adorned with real hair; a celluloid card that folds up into a small table; cards that open up accordion-like into colorful butterflies — and one from Germany with a movable arrangement that shows pigs jumping into a mill and coming out as sausages.

1875 ITEM ABOUT POSTAL CARDS FOUND AND REPORTED

By BERNICE M. HECK

Recently, I had the opportunity of purchasing several bound volumes of Arthur's Illustrated Home Magazine. I thought you might enjoy reading the following, which appeared in the February, 1875, issue:

Postal Card Abuse

"The writing of scurrilous, insulting or offending communications on postal cards, has been one of abuses attendant on our new and cheap method of correspondence. Mean-spirited, ill-natured and spiteful persons indulge in this species of annoyance, which is sometimes very great. The sending of bills and duns is also a common practice with some, where they have a creditor who from neglect or lack of means is dilatory in making payments. All this is wrong, and those who do it render themselves liable to prosecution. In England, this misuse of postal cards is punished by law, and we are glad to see that a suit has been brought in New York against a person for sending an improper card. The law provides the means for collecting debts which any creditor can use. Dunning by postal cards, or in any other annoying or humiliating way, is not one of these; and creditors who resort to such methods render themselves liable to a suit at law."

There is no name signed, but the article appeared in "Editor's Department," together with other articles on various subjects. The editor was Mr. T. S. Arthur.

POST CARD SHORTS, NEWS AND PREVIEWS

1. At the Metropolitan Post Card Collectors' Club's annual Henry A. Goebel Awards, which exhibit was held in November in connection with the ASDA National Stamp Show in New York, a new award was added. This award, called the Dr. Greischer Memorial Award, consists of a gold cup and purple ribbon and certificate. The donor of this award is Mrs. Elsie Lambert of Saratoga Springs, New York. This award was won in November by Win Grandy, of New Haven, Connecticut.

Other awards were First prize—blue ribbon—to Joseph J. Nardone for Old Holiday Greeting Cards; Second prize—red ribbon—for old time Automobiles on cards; Third prize—green ribbon—to Nellie Dulovich of Youngstown, Ohio, for Old time Poets and Poems on cards. Nine other special awards went to other prominent collectors.

2. From the Wolverine Post Card Club News for November, 1955, "Regular Meeting Place for Wolverine Post Card Club." Thanks to Detroit Historical Museum.

An honor has come to the Wolverine Post Card Club through an invitation to hold its meetings at the Detroit Historical Museum, centrally located in the Art Center at Woodward and Kirby Avenues. This invitation, extended because the club has shown an interest in the history of Detroit as recorded on picture post cards was made by Mr. Henry D. Brown, Director of the Museum. Members of the club sincerely thank Mr. Brown for providing such a fine regular meeting place, and Miss Barbara Paulson of the Museum Staff for taking care of arrangements."

3. The Christmas numbers of The Windy City Bulletin and the Elben Card Collector were indeed lovely—one in red and the other in green—with appropriate drawings, decorations, and Christmas features.

4. There seems to be a pleasant interchange of exhibits, ideas, etc. among the larger local clubs. The Wolverine Club had a display of cards on Detroit at The Windy City's Annual Post Card Exhibit in Chicago, last October.

5. Any ads or announcements about post cards for June should come to us the last of March. For October, they should reach us the last of July. A card with your address and meeting schedule would reach many. We have inquiries from time to time, from far and wide.

6. These newest Kodachromes make one want to start a new collection all over again. Remember, the beautiful cards of today will be the collectors' items tomorrow.

Ancient Apartment Indian

Why did the Mogollon Indians leave their apartment houses in the Blue River valley in New Mexico where they had lived some 5000 years? Dr. Paul S. Martin of the Natural History Museum, recently returned from his 12th expedition to the Mogollon territory, has an answer after moving tons of earth and so uncovering the remains of their homes, pottery fragments, and utensils. These, scientists used to reconstruct Mogollon history.

The Mogollons lived in pit houses about 100 A.D. Then they built apartment houses having as many as 20 adjoining rooms with walls of rock. These they abandoned around 1350, not from war, as no defenses for war were found, but probably because drouths made living difficult. They moved westward to Arizona.

Ancient American City

A buried city of 943 A.D. at Wickliffe, Ky., was found by Colonel and Mrs. Fain White King when they began excavating a group of prehistoric mounds. First they hit the thatched roof of a building. Then they found a large council house, altar, temples and burial grounds.

Their findings included children's animal toys and dolls, many carved from shell; fluorspar jewels; flints and pipes, including a red pipe 14 inches high and 10 inches across which shows a warrior's head. The owl seemed to have significance to these people as there were many painted owl jugs and water bottles. Also found were dishes of pottery in the form of birds, fish and animals.

After developing the project, the Kings turned it over to the State of Kentucky and retired to California.

Member of the "20 Year Club"

Pennsylvania—It seems like only yesterday that I was renewing my subscription, and here it is time to send in another renewal. I have subscribed to many kinds of magazines and have wearied of them sooner or later. This will be twenty years that I have been reading HOBBIES. I started by reading the neighbor's when I was a youngster. I missed only two years when I was in the army during World War II. After all these years I still enjoy reading some of my old issues of HOBBIES. They never grow old. I have obtained a lot of information from them to use in classifying and labeling my specimens. I picked up a book from one of your ads that shows how to make pictures out of relics. I am working on one now using my broken and poor Indian relics to form the picture. My wife collects cut glass and salt and pepper shakers. She has obtained some fine examples every time we have visited the World Antique Mart in Chicago. She was really enthusiastic over the cut glass exhibit in the Lightner Museum in St. Augustine. Incidentally after reading about the Museum in HOBBIES we became interested and made a special trip to see it. Bobby and Patty, our youngsters, enjoyed Fort Myers beach and came back with a collection of sea shells. All in all, we came back with a careful. We used HOBBIES to plan our trip, looking through the magazine for dealers along our routes. So you see HOBBIES is our "Hobby Bible" in more ways than one. When it comes to hobbies I could carry on all the night, so I better stop now. Looks like I wrote an article on HOBBIES Magazine.—Steve Pavlina.

The Wonderful Influence of Grandparents

Oregon—We have enjoyed your magazine very much and also share it with others who are less fortunate. It has helped me greatly in identifying my many thousands of buttons and also my old china and glass. Please renew our subscription. I have more than 20,000 old buttons of which I am very proud. Their beginning was through my Grandmother Foreman and my Grandmother Reed's old buttons. I have only been collecting 15 years. I am also collecting old china and glass of the same period. I have 868 old pitchers and 96 old vinegar cruets. I also have many beautiful pieces of cut glass. — Mrs. Grant Powell.

Two Generations of HOBBIES Readers

California—Have enjoyed your excellent magazine for years, and am glad to say the habit is running into the next generation. My seventeen year old daughter now uses it as a dictionary to find new addresses for her collection of "Goofies."—Aurora C. Osejo.

Good Library Publication

California—We are enclosing a subscription for the Pacific Grove Public Library, Pacific Grove, Calif. We're thanking you first for publishing such an interesting publication, and second for suggesting we send a subscription to "some good library."—H. D. Hazard.

Antiques Have Seen So Much of Living

Arkansas—HOBBIES is the Friendship Magazine! A friend met me after church yesterday and told me she had seen "us" in HOBBIES. Folks talk about HOBBIES at good places because HOBBIES tells about the good things in life — things that make human hearts remember that "good life." Antiques are not just things. They have seen so much living. — Margaret Moore Jacobs.

Place of Honor on Their Coffee Table

Washington—I am enclosing renewal. My mother and I share HOBBIES each month and we can't express the pleasure we find in it. And what a wealth of information! We refer to it often. And may our home never be entered without seeing a copy of HOBBIES lying on the coffee table.—Mrs. William L. West

The Latch String is Out

Canada—Enclosed please find $4 for a year of HOBBIES. Have been getting it from our local library, but want to own my own copy so I can make notations in the margins when I feel the urge to do so (A bad habit of mine). HOBBIES is a fine magazine, and if I ever get that far from home, I'm making a trip to Chicago for one reason—to see your building and its shops.—Muriel J. Stubbs

Three at One Clip!

Michigan—Many thanks for reminder. We have recently returned from Europe and had forgotten our renewal was due. Have enjoyed HOBBIES for many years and just do not want to miss a copy. It helps me a great deal in my business to refer to back issues for much information on varied subjects. Enclosed find check for $10.00 for three years renewal. —Eva A. Hogeboom.

The Glass Cane

Illinois—Please find enclosed a check for a subscription to HOBBIES Magazine. We have just returned from a vacation in St. Augustine, Fla., where I bought my first copy in the Lightner Museum of Hobbies. I learned more about antiques there than any other place or from all the books I have bought. I have loved old things since I can remember, and have quite a collection. So deep is my interest in them I have been planning to open a small shop in the near future and call the shop The Glass Cane. I will hang from the chandelier a lovely white and amber blown and twisted glass cane given me by a very good friend. It was made in the now extinct Glass Works of Belleville, Ill. I know my friend will be pleased. I will be looking forward to my HOBBIES Magazine. — Mrs. J. J. Phillips.

Their "Wish Book"

Indiana—It's always a red-letter day at our house when "HOBBIES" arrives. We're as bad as Snuffy Smith and Aunt Loweezy over the arrival of the "wish book."—Mrs. Joseph A. Plymate.

Rhyming Fan

Georgia—I'd rather be arrested by London "bobbies" or be in the state known as comatose in public places like hotel lobbies than not send check, which I enclose, and be deprived of HOBBIES.—Mrs. Henry H. Ogden.

Real joy

Tennessee—I wish I enjoyed every dollar that I spend as much as my $3.50 renewal that I send each year. — John H. Rowden.

The Power of Consistent Advertising

Kentucky—I enclose my three year renewal, and copy for the current issue. Over a period of years, I have found that consistent advertising does pay. Since there are no local buyers here, mail-order selling is my only solution. I do not have what one would call a really large business, but a steady and fairly profitable one. Too, I have made many sales to people who stopped as a result of reading my ads in HOBBIES. My best wishes for many more years of a really serviceable magazine. — Audrey R. Ingram.

Our Friend, Too

Iowa—Am enclosing $3.50 for a subscription. Enjoyed looking through a friend's HOBBIES and was so fascinated it is on my reading list today.—Mrs. W. H. Hadler.

Our Best To You

Ohio—Enclosed please find check for one year subscription to your fine magazine, for $3.50. This is something I should have done long ago I know, but I always had the opportunity to read them and now that I'm going to open an Antique Shop I want to have HOBBIES on hand at all times. So please wish me luck.—Mrs. Sally Bradstreet.

Spreading the Cause

New Jersey—Enclosed please find $3.50 for a one year subscription to be sent to the following . . . I enjoy your magazine so much that I'm sending it to friends, etc., for birthday gifts.—Mrs. A. J. Mosler.

Member of Hobbies Boosters' Club

California—Please find enclosed check for payment for one year's subscription for HOBBIES. I would like it to begin with your next issue if possible. Please send to Mrs. Charles H. Newton, Colorado. From another of your loyal friends and supporters. — Mrs. R. T. Cassell.

A Fine Proxy, We'd Say

California—Please enter a subscription at once for Mrs. Veda Fraser. This is a birthday gift to her from her husband. I am just the proxy.—Mrs. Hazel C. Bevans.

Early English Weekly Literary Journals 1803-1832

By RAYMOND J. WALKER

The weekly Literary Journal, projected and edited by James Mill, was a review of literature, science, manners and politics. It started in 1803 and was published each Thursday until 1806. It had thirty pages and sold for a shilling a copy. In the early issues its literary value was limited to a small department of poetry and its literary contents increased up to the time of its abandonment. It was the true precursor of the Literary Gazette and the Athenaeum.

The Director came upon the English scene in 1808. It was edited by Thomas Frognall Dibdin and lasted for twenty-four numbers. Sir Thomas Bernard was its founder and publisher but Dibdin wrote two-thirds of its contents. It was a one-shilling octavo serial of thirty-two pages and it included essays in literature, art and manners, "bibliographia," analyses of the lectures at the Royal Institution, and descriptions of pictures for sale at the British galleries. In these essays we find Dibdin's comment on the libraries of Gough, Harley, and Rowlinson and the Landsdowne manuscripts. There are essays on the contemporary theatre, Shakespeare's plays, and neglected literature.

However, neither of these journals established the form which was followed by the many literary journals of the 19th century. For this form we must look to Leigh Hunt's Examiner, which began in 1808 and continued under various editors until 1881. This periodical is important to the literary historian because of its criticisms, though its literary significance was less deliberate than accidental, and was chiefly the result of Hunt's championing of his friends. When this championing phase had passed the literary influence of the Examiner vanished. The first twenty were its best years as a critical periodical and its success affected the form and the quality of the better weeklies that followed.

Before we continue with our history of weekly literary periodicals let us give some biographical data on the editor of the Examiner. James Henry Leigh Hunt was born Oct. 19, 1784 at Southgate, Middlesex, England. The fortunes of war and politics affected the life of his father or he might have been born an American.

His father, the Rev. Isaac Hunt, was a native of the West Indies, where his father was the rector of St. Michael's at Bridgetown, Barbados. Isaac was educated at the College of Philadelphia where he studied law and intended to settle and practice in that profession. He had married Mary Shewell, the daughter of Stephen Shewell, a merchant of Philadelphia. Mary's aunt was the wife of Benjamin West the early American painter. When the Colonies chose to separate from England, Isaac went to the mother-country where he became a preacher at Bentinck Chapel, Lisson Green, Paddington, and was at one time a tutor in the family of the Duke of Chandos. He published sermons and wrote "Rights of Englishmen: An Antidote to the Poison of Thomas Paine" (1791).

Leigh Hunt aspired to be a poet and at an early age his father had his poems published by subscription. Of these the poet wrote: "I was as proud of the book as I am ashamed of it now." Hunt received his early education at Christ Hospital which was the alma mater of Coleridge and Lamb. Hunt held a clerkship in the War Office but in 1808 joined with his brother John in establishing the Examiner. We will omit his long catalog of works. With his brother John, Leigh went to prison for referring to the Prince Regent as "a fat Adonis of 50." The brothers also published "The Reflector," a quarterly.

Hunt wrote with an acute power of conception, a sparkling and lively fancy, and a quaintly curious felicity of diction, the grand characteristic of his poetry was word-painting, and in this he was rivaled only by Keats in the latter's last and best productions. Hunt's heroic couplet had much of the life, strength and flexibility of Dryden. With Keats, he was called a Cockney poet but he lived to see that term no longer used. His translations from the Italian were highly praised. However, his ambition to excel as a bard was diverted. His principal success lay in a certain vein of essay-writing, in which fancy and familiarity were delightfully combined. Hazlitt said that Hunt was among the best and the least corrupted of English poetical prose writers. In Hunt's light but well supported columns, Hazlitt found the raciness, the sharpness and the sparkling effect of poetry, with little that was extravagant or far-fetched, with no turgidity or pompous pretension. As an essay writer he inherited more of the spirit of Steele than any man since that essayist's time.

At the beginning, the Examiner neglected literature except for a theatrical department. But when Shelley and Keats began to need critical support Hunt gave them all he could through his weekly. He defended them against attacks in the Quarterly by Croker and John Taylor Coleridge. The Tories could not forgive the poets for their association with Hunt. Hunt believed that Shelley and Keats were great poets and the passing of years has proved that he was right.

In the Examiner, between 1816 and 1822, eleven of Shelley's most important poems were published. During Shelley's lifetime no other periodical contained so many articles about his work as did the Examiner. Keats and Byron were also defended by Hunt and the Examiner became the most valorous champion of the romantic school of poets. Of the circle that gathered about Hunt at Hampstead were William Hazlitt, Charles Lamb, Bryan Proctor, Benjamin Haydon and other celebrities in the literary world of the period.

After the departure of Shelley for Italy, Hunt encountered financial difficulties and was invited to Italy with his wife and seven children. There he was subsidized by Byron as the editor of the Liberal which lived through four quarterly issues. From 1825 to 1847, Hunt edited many papers, but was plagued by poverty and sickness and often had to accept the help of Mrs. Shelley. In 1847 Hunt received a Civil List pension. He died at Putney, August 28, 1859.

The Examiner was a 16-page weekly journal issued on Saturday. The department called the Political Examiner contained the most fearless political writing of the day. During the 1820's the form of the paper was changed and a good deal of poetry was included, as well as criticism and a department of short reviews called the Literary Examiner. In 1845 the Examiner had a circulation of 6,000 a week and at that period John Forster was associated with its publisher, Albany Fonblanque.

Other periodicals along the Examiner's lines appeared. The Literary Gazette existed from 1817 to 1862. It was founded by William Jerdan who edited it until 1850. In 1862 it was merged with the Parthenon, a weekly journal edited by W. C. Goodwin. In its first two years the Gazette boasted it had reviewed four hundred new works "with extracts" and some fifty biographical memoirs had been published.

The Champion, formerly Drakard's Paper, appeared from 1814 to 1822. It was edited by John Scott, later the unfortunate editor of the London Magazine, who was killed in a duel by the champion of a rival publication. The Champion was an eight-page Sunday newspaper and contained some miscellaneous literary matter.

A sixteen-page weekly paper selling for six-pence was a model for later literary periodicals. This was the Literary Journal, and General Miscellany of Science, Arts, History, Politics, etc., which had a brief career in 1818 and 1819 and contained critical articles on such writers as Byron, Cobbett, Hogg, Lamb, Scott and Wordsworth.

The Literary Chronicle and Weekly Review which began in 1819 as a six-penny Saturday paper is considered by students to be almost equally as good as the Journal and contained well-written reviews of Byron, Crabbe, Lockhart, etc. Beginning with No. 59 it became the Country Literary Chronicle and after 260 numbers it was merged with the Athenaeum in 1828.

The Athenaeum which began publication January 2, 1828, also took in the Verulam, which had a brief life of two months. James Silk Buckingham was the founder and proprietor of the Athenaeum. He had been expelled from India because of his attacks on the colonial government in the Calcutta Journal. After two years Charles Wentworth Dilke took over the editorship and took a stand against the "paid puffs" of the book trade. He changed the issue date from Wednesday to Saturday and reduced the price to four-pence. Among the later editors of the Athenaeum was William Hepworth Dixon (1853-1869). At one time Thomas Hood was a co-proprietor with Dilke. Charles Lamb and Barry Cornwall were early contributors and in its long life it presented many well known literary names. It was merged with the Nation as The Nation and Athenaeum on February 21, 1921, in its 93rd year.

To get back to the early days we must not omit The Literary Examiner commenced by John Hunt on July 5, 1823. It was published on Saturdays and was entirely devoted to belles-lettres. It lasted for only twenty-six numbers. Leigh Hunt contributed to it but was in Italy during the time of its existence. This was a comeback attempt by John after the Hunts had lost control of the Examiner. It was a continuation of the Indicator (1819-21) which had been published on Thursdays for seventy-six weeks. Some of Leigh Hunt's best work appeared in the Indicator.

In 1828 Leigh Hunt issued his Companion. This was an eight-page paper published on Wednesday and with its fifth number went to sixteen pages and sold for three pence, half the price of the Athenaeum of which it was a cut-throat competitor but it died after nineteen issues.

Also in 1828 on January 5 came the first issue of the Literary Journal: A Weekly Review. It was an unattractive eight-page critical periodical which gave up the ghost after October 4 of the same year, a victim of itself and its competitors.

The Spectator which has survived to our time also saw the light in 1828 as a mixture of politics, literature and science. In the early days its element of news was important and news occupied 15 of its twenty-four pages. It was priced at a shilling and was published on Saturday. By 1860 it had thirty-two pages but six were devoted to advertisements and the news had been abandoned but it came back later. Today the Spectator continues along its original plan. It was established by Robert Stephen Rintoul, who had printed and edited the Dundee Advertiser. He owned the Spectator until his death in 1858.

The Edinburgh Literary Journal or Weekly Register of Criticism and Belles-Lettres also came upon the scene in 1828 with its first issue on November 15 and it continued until December 1831. It had good contributors but the Scotch capital was soon to have a longer-lived periodical in Chambers' Edinburgh Journal. This last was an eight-page Saturday folio commenced in 1832. Its early material was not original and it had few name writers. It had a long life and was in existence in recent years.

We would like to continue this history of early English literary weeklies but it is a large task and we have covered the early period. To list the literary weekly up to the present time would be beyond the scope of a short article. We may have another section at a later date.

fortunately many people pay so little attention to what they see that they have never noticed the difference between a pine and a spruce. They are not mentally alert. Their eyes are not trained to distinguish details quickly. They fail to get the mental stimulus from an outing that they should because their minds are not receiving clear-cut impressions.

Nature study of any kind is a wonderful help but the broader the base the better. The rockhound places an unnecessary limit on himself if he sees only rocks and minerals. He will broaden his outlook and add to his interest in life if he will also pay some attention to the birds and trees and other natural objects about him. The same holds true for the bird student and the botanist.

All the departments of nature are woven together. Certain types of trees and other plants are associated only with certain rocks and minerals. The bristlecone pine grows on dolomite. The sargent cypress is only found on serpentine. The "desert plumes" grow where there is selenium in the soil. Geological formations can sometimes be mapped by making a plant survey when no rocks outcrop.

Even a little time spent in the study of native trees will add to ones interest in nature. Try making a little checking collection of as many trees as possible. The simplest one may consist of branches about 6 inches long showing characteristic foliage. These can be pressed in newspapers under a weight. We cut double walled cardboard to a standard 5x7 inch size, place a sheet of white paper of the same size on it, put a few drops of duco on the under side of the branch and lay it on the paper. For a cover one can use cellophane or 5x7 film that has been carefully cleaned. Bind carefully with gummed paper all the way around and you will be surprised how nice your specimens look. Don't forget the label which should give common name, technical name, plant family and locality where obtained.

"Spheres" Collection

The hidden beauty of rock and mineral masses was recently brought out in a collection of highly polished spheres in the mineral alcove of the Hall of Natural Science at Rochester, N. Y., Museum of Arts and Sciences.

The spheres were created by Leo J. Houlihan, of Conesus, N. Y., and represent a unique and exacting type of lapidary art. Each mineral or rock mass has been meticulously carved into a sphere by a very involved process until an exceptional degree of roundness and an extremely high polish is achieved. Interesting and unusual variations of structure, depth and color are revealed in the polished spheres.

Most dramatic in the collection is a Snowflake Obsidian from Oregon. Silvery snowflakes are dotted around the glossy black sphere. Delicate in color and quality is Rose Quartz from North Dakota. Vibrant in a deep rose tone is a piece of Rhodochroite from Argentina. Rich browns and gold tones are revealed in a piece of Tiger Eye from Africa; while gold, brown, orange and yellow form a calico pattern in the Breccia Jasper from California. The globe of the earth is reflected in the structure of Unakite from Virginia. Petrified Wood from Arizona takes on a new appearance in the polished sphere.

Interesting specimens from the Rochester area include Fossiliferous Sandstone from Alfred, N. Y., and Porphyry from Pultneyville, N. Y.

Also original and unique with Mr. Houlihan are the metal castings on which he displays the spheres. They are in the form of idealistic dragons and other animals which he has produced by the lost wax process.

LITTLE BOOKS

From MINIATURIA

By GEORGENE O'DONNELL

Number 8 of the News Letter printed a compilation of evidence gathered from collectors, justifying their hobby. As one hobbyist put it, "Mohammedan princes collect wives; empires collect smaller kingdoms; small boys collect strings, nails and so on. There is something inherent in man which bids him collect whatever interests him. Readability of small books has nothing to do with the case." When the impracticality of the hobby is emphasized by some non-collector, one answer has been that, for instance, a stamp collector cannot use his treasures for forwarding letters, the ceramic collector does not serve his family dinner on his specimens, the coin collector does not spend his gold except for more coins. Hence, why should it be necessary that a miniature book collector always be able to read his prized small books? But after all, as most collectors agree, it is never possible to justify to a non-collector's satisfaction that the hobbyist is not wasting his time and money. Some of the more facetious retorts to a non-collector's chiding has been that small books are valuable in that they allow an author to eat his words more easily or that the eyes of a censor are ruined reading small volumes, looking for something to suppress.

Mr. Henderson acquired the finest collection of Jewish miniature books in the world. In addition to those already mentioned is the Siddur, the prayer book for the entire year, printed in Amsterdam in 1800, two and one-eighth by one and one-quarter inches. It is of red leather with silver clasps and contains 280 pages. Most of the prayers are from the Psalms and many are in the Aramaic dialect. Another edition printed in Jerusalem in 1885 is bound in gumwood from the garden of Olives. The Haggada which tells the story of the exodus from Egypt and is used on the eve of the Passover, was printed in 1889 in Vilna. It is bound in embossed boards, two and three-quarters by two and one-eighth inches in size. Also printed in Vilna, 1883, is the Tehilim (Psalms of David), two and one half by two inches, bound in red embossed cloth and containing 378 pages. Another edition, printed in Pisa, in 1863, has 200 pages. This volume is commonly termed the Hebrew Psalter. The Toras Moshe (Teachings of Moses), mentioned previously as the smallest Jewish book, is fifteen-sixteenths by eleven sixteenths of an inch, contains the first five books of the Bible, is bound in calf and was published in Chicago by H. L. Meiter. Among the older Hebrew books is The Book of Truth and Faith (Sefer Emes Ve Emrhor) by Itzchock Arubash, printed in Hebrew and Italian in Venice, 1672, 218 pages and measures three and three-quarters by two and one-half inches.

An unusual Oriental book is a Chochu or Chi-Chi, a fortune telling device used by both the Japanese and Chinese. The text is printed on accordion folded sheets with bamboo ends, measuring one and five-eighths by five-eighths inches. Accompanying this is a wooden hexagonal cylinder with bone ends containing bone sticks. By shaking the box, a numbered bone stick pops out of a hole in the end. This number is compared with a similar one in the text and that fortune is read. Small Oriental prayer books are made on the same principle.

Among Mr. Henderson's collection of telephone books is a volume, two and five-eighths by one and seven-eighths, made for the use of Geisha girls in Japan for their convenience in directing the attention of their clients to further sources of entertainment. The book contains the telephone numbers of theatres, actors, teachers of dancing, voice instruction, and instructors for musical instruments, as well as motion picture theatres, numbers of comedians, wrestlers, arenas and taxicab companies, all in the cities of Tokio and Yokohama. A separate volume devoted to eating places in Japanese cities gives telephone numbers for both Kiota and European cooking.

The one religious book among these Japanese volumes is a translation from the Sanskrit version of Hearts of Wisdom, (O Mamori Han Nia Shingio). This Buddhist prayer book is three by one inches and folds in the fashion of the accordion; it is a miniature of the larger size prayer books used only by Buddhist priests in the temple. The Buddhists began to use these folding books about 1320 A.D.; before that time, the scroll recorded their service. These miniature books are carried in a little bag on the person of the worshipper like scapular medals worn by Catholics. In the preface of the Buddhist prayer book, is a paragraph which reads: "If you keep this in your pocket always, it will protect you from evil and accident. Happiness and prosperity will come to the younger generation."

Here too is an unusual Japanese towel book, made of blue cloth and folded to form a book of eight pages, six by three and three-quarters inches. Each page is designed to be complete in itself with legend and illustration. By cutting the threads which bind the pages it becomes a towel. The first outside page which would be the outside book cover of an English book carries the words, Umi-No-Heitai, meaning Marines. Page two is entitled Nippon-Kaigun-Banzai, meaning Long Live the Japanese Navy, and illustrated with a picture of a Japanese ship. Other pages are devoted to similar military subjects showing sailors saluting the navy flag and so on.

NATURAL HISTORY

Fossil Algae From the Glacial Drift

By RALPH E. HODGES

By the beginning of the Cambrian Period, some 540 million years ago, marine animal life had developed the main group of backbone-less or invertebrates. Rocks of that period preserve these fossils. Animal life, in the main, consisted of corals, sponges, worms, cystoids, echinoderms and brachiopods. Plant life was mainly bacteria and algae.

Life drifting in the shallow water took on power of movement to secure food. Food caused energy and growth. Organisms increased in size and complexity. Abundance of life and the right environment produced an enormous number of organisms. As plants and animals died, their skeletons added minerals for food. The great competition and resultant struggles for existence produced more advanced species. The ancient shallow seas became the hotbed of marine evolution. From this our present marine life sprang. Some of this ancient marine life may be found as fossils in glacial drift.

Algae, one of nature's simplest plants, is flowerless, belongs to the group Thallophytes, contains chlorophyll, which fungi does not, and is one of the earliest forms of marine life. Present day algae number some 20,000 known species and are divided into 4 main groups: (1) bluegreen algae, (2) green algae, (3) brown algae, (4) red algae. Classification is based mainly on color pigment in the cells and reproductive organs.

Algae may be found on rocks, in running water, in bogs, lakes and streams, in soil, on plants and on animals. Algae flourishes on glaciers, snowbanks and under ice. Sometimes landscape coloring of green, yellow, brown or red is due to algae. One algae or another, given adequate water, light and suitable temperature, can thrive almost anywhere.

Fossil algae has been found in limestones of all ancient seas from the Proterozoic Era. In the Cambrian Period it was quite numerous. It grew more so, and in diversified forms, in latter periods. Algae was the food supply for thousands of marine animals.

A variety of species of fossil algae are known. They are grouped by their method of formation into two kinds. Most common are the colonial forms which usually grow in mold-like colonies, precipitate calcium carbonate, and build globular or irregular structures with a fine concentric lamination. The second kind is the simple or psilotic form. Recognition and classification of fossil algae is often difficult as many show no trace of the original cell structure.

Melobesiaeae are found in gravel pits. One may see a pebble or cobblestone that has its top surface covered with a musty or lime-like gray, grayish black, or white substance different from the color of the rock. The lime will not rub off. Some rocks are covered with a basal thin crust of gray lime, showing growth starting; others, more advanced, show a thick sprouting of short branching masses. After death, a thin basal coating of white lime is left.

Other forms of growth of this lime-secreting red algae, are crusts, nodules, loose sheets or leaf-like masses. They are not found in glacial debris, though glacial waters gave them fresh water required for thriving. They are found from the Cretaceous to the present.

Solenoporaceae are rocks of the glacial drift, stained clay colors, due to water seepage changing the color after burial. Some have porous or rotten-like appearance. Their texture is a mud-like silt. The sponge-like look is due to rearrangement of their polygonal cell structure. They may be gray if not discolored by water seepage.

Some large masses started growth on petrified algae and covered it in encrusting form. Very old pieces have changed to a flint-like texture, showing a rotten appearance. Encrusting forms appeared by late Paleozoic and ranged to Cretaceous.

Both these fossil forms belong to the class Rhodophyta (red algae).

Microcodium or gray masses, not petrified, may be seen in the vertical walls and floors of a newly opened gravel pit, from pebble to boulder in size. These fossils are in the clay layer and gravel layer. There are none in the sand layer.

Pit walls and broken clay chunks on the pit floor disclose, besides rocks, small to large pieces of gray matter not petrified. Some are brown or black and look like clay or marl. When dry and rubbed between the fingers they feel limy and crumble into small scale-like flakes. If damp or wet, as after a rain, the mass can be molded into balls as clay or putty.

One thinks of these masses as clay or marl from an ancient lake bed. They do not contain remains of shell life, as marl often does, nor cell structure.

But these gray masses are important in studying limestones in the debris as they were living pieces of algae in the glacial waters of the Ice Age in North America.

Collecting many pieces of limestone is necessary before the gray masses and limestones can be fitted together in a pattern. The gray masses may show cell structure of the genera Microdium, of the family Codiaceae, of class Chlorophyta (green algae), linked to the same cell structure found in limestones.

In some hills these gray masses are non-existent, in others only one or two are found. Or they may be so numerous on top the gravel layer that a hand can not be placed between their pancake shapes without touching others. They are found in a horizontal or slanting position, as the glacial waters washed them, along with other debris.

Found among gravel layers, they are small to large masses, often one above the other, separated by a layer of pebbles impressed in their surfaces. Those in the clay layer are usually larger, with smoother surfaces. In some, layered edges show prominently. Top masses are not so compact, and are the younger in growth.

Algae in gravel-laden glacial streams and lakes were subjected to numerous stresses by movement of rocks and other debris carried by the waters, but being quite elastic, took much pressure before being disturbed from their beds. Probably they had their place of living changed from time to time unless anchored to rock. If the glacial waters carried much debris the algae were buried alive. As they died accumulating glacial debris buried them. Pressures compressed them into a gray mass so the cell structure became unrecognizable. Pressures worked the masses of algae to the slanting positions they are found in. Pressure spread the mass, leaving uneven edges which ring the algae. Blowing sand cut the exposed edges. The tops are generally smoothed by water action.

Their distribution in gravel layer and clay layer show how numerous they grew. Areas of few or none indicate conditions were not right for their growth and abundance. Where they are numerous, conditions were ideal. They grew, died, were buried and others took root on top.

Generally these gray masses appear light gray or dark gray. When broken they may show a variation of coloration. Small masses are usually the same light or dark gray all through. Large masses show light gray exteriors and dark gray interiors. Some have a light gray exterior and bluish gray interior. Still other large masses will vary as light or dark brown, light green, pale yellow and red.

Cell structure shows a vast quantity of burnished flecks of iron and minute grains of sand. These probably affect the coloration along with the minerals in the water.

One will find an occasional black or brownish mass in the debris. Of the black, there are two varieties. One looks like a piece of dried muck. A muddy appearance instead of a flaky texture shows at the edges, the result of former gray masses having much foreign matter, as muck and sand, and having been exposed to turbulent waters before burial.

The other type of black masses are found in the form of shale-like layers which easily split across the mass. Due to lightness in weight and appearance they look like charred wood or compressed muck. Considerable foreign matter may be mixed with the original gray mass. They have been subjected to much weathering, particularly drying out in the sun before burial.

Algal limestones seem to be former pieces of algae found in the glacial drift as gray masses before they were petrified.

Much limestone rock is in the clay and gravel layers of a gravel pit, in size ranging from small pebbles to large boulders, in color from light gray to steel gray, dark gray and white. Some are broken, some are waterworn, others are well preserved.

Many pieces show no fossils on their surface or interiors. They seem pieces of limestone broken off from the ancient sea floor of limy mud which turned to limestone. On close examination some pieces show edges protruding in layers such as non-petrified gray masses have. Others show a wavy, washboard effect, the result of wave action while the mass was in a plastic state. Some have smooth surfaces with depressions formed by lesser wave action. Sand and pebbles have been pressed in the surfaces of others before they petrified. Cracked surfaces of some show they dried in the sun and cracked just as mud cracks.

Many limestones are found in the process of separation, like soggy masses of the gray pieces as they begin sliding down a bank when wet.

These pieces of limestone found in the glacial debris are of algae origin. They resulted from the deposit of calcium carbonate by the plant, and become petrified, their cellular structure having been compressed beyond recognition.

In age the light gray limestones are believed to be the youngest, the dark gray older, and the white to cream color and those having a powder coating, the oldest.

Algal limestone may show cell structure. Some larger pieces, when broken up, disclose an interior of sponge-like appearance. With power lens, cell structure can be recognized. An occasional small or large limestone with its surface somewhat rounded may be a mass of cells well preserved.

After a large hill was dug away to its core, the writer found a mass of cell structures making up an entire rock. Broken in half it showed the round cell structure of thousands of cells, each with a nucleus of brownish flecks of iron mixed with lime particles and sand. Eventually a gray putty mass, not petrified, was found having the same cellular structure as limestone. Specimens with cell structure are rare.

Many limestones show various forms of embedded marine life. Most of these fossils can not be taken from the limestone without breaking. Shells are the easiest to extract.

Many limestones which existed as algae in ancient seas acted as graves for plants and animals. As the marine life died, corals, shells, crinoids, sponges, etc., sank toward the sea floor, and were caught in living or dead masses of algae. Both petrified together. In other instances algae masses started to grow upon remains that had reached the sea floor, spreading over and embedding them. When the algae died both became fossilized.

The age of algae can be determined by the identification of the index fossils they contain. These pieces of algal limestone were picked up by the glacier and carried along. Algal masses were found embedded in limestone with and without fossils by the writer, in a limestone quarry near Sylvania, Ohio.

The Spongiostromata family of algae, of the class Cyanophyta (blue-green), are calcareous. Their structure is a colony of fine tissue or mat-like formation. Calcium carbonate is deposited on the outside of the colony or cell, or between the tissues, not in the cell wall. This type of algae can be called porous. The tissues, when fossilized, are fragile and break easily unless handled with care. Many are stained clay color. Some pieces show excellent structure. The infiltration of fine sand between the tissues of some hardens the masses and defines structure. Many rocks are found completely crystallized. These may be hard to identify because their minute structure has been altered. Algae of this family is found from Proterozoic to recent.

There are two subfamilies. The Stromalolithi has several genera represented in fossils deposited in the drift. The Oncolithi has the most algal biscuits. A few excellent specimens of algal biscuits have been found in the drift.

The most common fossils of the first genus are the Cryptozoons. Spherical, enlarging from a small center (cabbage-like), they live in colonies. Small Cryptozoons range in size from  $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch. Large size measuring 18 inches in diameter were observed at the limestone quarry at Clay Center, Ohio. Fine-grained sand, filtering between their spherical structures, hardens and preserves the outlines in many fossils. These were important marine forms in reef-building of the Paleozoic seas.

The genus Collenia are more or less dome-shaped, turbinate, or massive laminated bodies, that grew with an arched surface uppermost, by addition of external layers or lamellae of varying thickness with interspaces that vary even in the same specimen. Some show structure in fragile form, others have porous space filled with sediment, and some crystallized. Good type specimens can be found.

Large and small specimens of Gouldina Magna genus are recognized by wavy appearance. Their central portion is relatively smaller and often less distinct than their outer portion. They have generally recrystallized into large solid masses.

Algae of one kind or another are numerous in the glacial drift. They make up most of the limestones found, whether recognized as such or not. Many are broken, others waterworn, some in fragments, but there are many excellent specimens to be had for the picking.

Edward VII and Playing Cards

Edward VII, oldest son of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert of the House of Saxon, was born 1841, and reigned from the death of Victoria, January 22, 1901, until his passing in 1910. Edward VII was the first son of nine children and was proclaimed Prince of Wales at an early age.

The Edward regime did not leave its influence around the world as the Victorian era did, but Edward was King for only nine years while Victoria was ruler for sixty-four years, so that could hardly be expected.

His influence on the populace was good and he was one of the most beloved Kings of all who had reigned. Albert Edward, as he was known, had represented the crown for his mother at public functions after the death of his father, Prince Albert, so he was known for his tactful diplomacy. His excellent common sense and personal charm made friends readily. As Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, he visited North America and the Near East prior to his marriage in 1863 to Alexandra, Royal Princess of Denmark, daughter of Christian IX of Denmark.

They had six children. The oldest, Albert Victor Christian Edward, was born 1864 and became Duke of Clarence, next in line as Prince of Wales. He was engaged to Victoria Mary, daughter of the Duke of Tech, but died January 14, 1892.

The second son, George Frederick, became heir apparent and was eventually the Prince of Wales, then George V. He married Victoria Mary Tech, who had been engaged to the Duke of Clarence, the year following the Duke's death.

The third child, a boy named Alexander, was born April 6, 1871 and lived only a day. The fourth, a daughter, Maude Charlotte married her first cousin, Prince Christian of Denmark who later became King Hakon VII of Norway.

The fifth child, a daughter, Victoria Alexandria, died unmarried. The name of the sixth child is not clear but it seems he became the Duke of Fife.

Edward VII was a liberal patron of the Arts and Sciences and a social leader. Political problems were a big issue at that time and his tactful handling of the Liberal leaders softened the public's impression of the Queen's partiality for the Conservatives.

Edward VII became King on the death of his mother, Queen Victoria. The Coronation was scheduled for the following year on June 2, 1902, but, due to his serious illness, was postponed for some weeks.

The Durbar, or official reception in India, was held in 1903 at which time he was crowned Emperor of India. This was the second of the three great Durbars held in India. The first was the Coronation of his mother, Victoria, the second, his own crowning; and the third, the Coronation of George V.

As King, Edward was well received on two visits to Ireland and the Continent. He is credited with having promoted better understanding with the Great Powers by his tact and personality. He was largely responsible for the Entente with France and it was hoped the arbitration treaties which he helped bring about would contribute to the preservation of world peace. Victoria was loved but the charm and common sense of Edward won the respect of the people and did much to elevate the prestige for the Crown.

In relation to Playing Cards the reign of Edward VII was so short that issues in his honor were quite limited in number.

The set issued for the Royal Family, designed by Owen Jones, presented at an exhibition in 1851, was probably the first multicolored issue for him as the Prince of Wales. This is a square corner card with "P.W." surrounded by a spray of daisies and fuchsias on two, or possibly three different colored backgrounds, one of which is cream.

In 1863, also with square corners, was an issue with his Coat-of-Arms on a background of roses, issued by De La Rue in commemoration of Edward's Wedding. At this time De La Rue also issued a square corner with the Coat-of-Arms of Alexandria, Princess Royal of Denmark, on a background of white lilies and small purple flowers in commemoration of her marriage to the Prince of Wales that year. Both of these issues in 1863 had double heads.

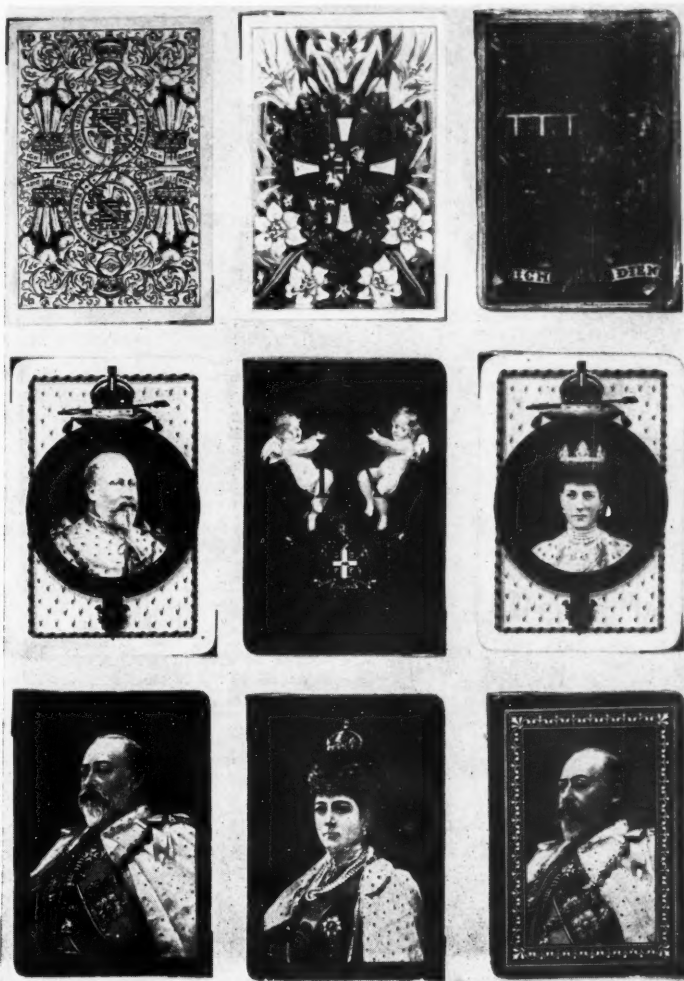

An issue, also with double heads and square corners, but probably earlier, for the Prince of Wales in a reversible design, was printed in blue on pink background. These are the only known issues for the Prince of Wales with square corners, though undoubtedly there are others. There should be a mate for this reversible design on pink background, but as yet it has not been reported.

In 1892 a Mourning card for the Duke of Clarence was issued with slightly rounded corners but on very stiff cardboard typical of that period. It is an unusual design in as much as it consists of a shield bearing a coat-of-arms which fills the card, a large size, and immediately below is the motto "Ich Dien" (I Serve).

This shield bears the quartered Arms of the Prince of Wales on the left side and those of the Royal Princess of Denmark on the right side. It is very rare for a husband's Arms to be quartered with the wife's, since her arms are on a small shield superimposed on his larger shield. We assume it was because she was of Royal birth and on an equal standing with him, and represented the united but individual grief of each of them for their eldest son.

There were the usual numerous issues for Edward VII's Coronation as King of England and also Emperor of India. Only eighteen issues have come to the attention of collectors to date, but it is almost a certainty the years will bring forth others.

In 1904 the U.S. Playing Card Com-

FIRST ROW—Cards No. 1 Prince of Wales, blue printing on pink background. (No. 205) No. 2 Issue commemorating the marriage of Royal Princess Alexandria of Denmark to the Prince of Wales. No. 3 Mourning card for the Duke of Clarence.

SECOND ROW—Card No. 4 Coronation Issue for Edward VII, with gold printing and pink and gold cord framing the design. No. 5 Coronation card by the Worshipful Co. issued in 1902, green background with red border. No. 6 Queen Alexandria, Coronation Issue, mate to No. 4.

THIRD ROW—Cards No. 7, 8 and 9, Issues by the U. S. Playing Card Company in 1904. (See text.) There are other issues which are much more common, not illustrated.

pany departed from its usual policy and issued a card each for King Edward VII and Alexandria, also for the Prince of Wales, later King George V, and the Princess of Wales, better known to us as Queen Mary. These four cards had black borders and have been reported by many collectors as having been issued in commemoration of the death of Edward. This is an error since they were issued in 1904.

The same portrait of Edward VII, was issued in a smaller frame, with a wide, light purple border on one, and a bright red border on another. The portrait was not in the life-like colors of the original 1904 portrait.

Thus, the issues for Edward VII were quite limited in number due to his brief reign, but what they miss in number is made up for in excellence in design and coloring.

"At the Sign of the Crest"

Billings Coat-of-Arms

By HAZEL KRAFT EILERS

This Coat-of-Arms is ascribed to William Billings who came to New England from Taunton, England where he was born about 1629. He was a lineal descendant of Sir Thomas Billing, who was knighted in 1458. He settled in Stonington, Conn., becoming one of its landed proprietors. He married Dec. 5, 1657, Mary (surname unknown) and died at Stonington, Mar. 16, 1712-13. His line is traced back for eight generations to John Billing of Rowell and Rushden, Northants, father of Sir Thomas who married into the Gifford family.

Georgé Baker's Northamptonshire (1822-30) under Billing of Astwell, Sutton Hundred, gives the following description of the Billing Coat-of-Arms: "Argent a cross voided between four cross crosslets fitchee gules. Thomas Billing of Astwell, Sergeant at Law 31 Hen 6 (1453), Justice, K. B. 4 Edw. 4 (1464), Lord Chief Justice, K. B. 8 Edw. 4 (1468-9), died May 5, 1481 (21 Edw. 4); married 1st, Katherine, daughter of Roger Gifford of Twyford, Co. Bucks, and Hellidon, Esq., who died March 8, (1479-80), (20 Edw. 4). He married 2nd Mary, daughter and heiress of Robert Wesenham, of Conington, Co. Hants, Esq., who died March 14, 1499 (15 Hen. 7).

G. Andrews Moriarty has an article in the New England Register (Vol. 75) on the Giffard-Gifford family carrying the Giffard line back to Osbert Giffard (1233-1300).

The Billings progenitors in America are numerous. For several decades Howard Ward Dana made a study of the grounds, and compilations of his findings are printed in volumes of the New England Historical and Genealogical Register under various dates.

Volume 81 (1927) has an article on "The Billings Family of Connecticut"; Volume 91, "Ebenezer Billings of Milton, Mass."; Volume 96 (1942) "The Saco, Maine Descendants of Nathaniel Billings of Concord, Mass." Volume 97 calls attention to other early settlers: Richard of Hartford, Conn., Hadley and Hatfield, Mass.; Roger of Dorchester, Mass.; Nathaniel of Concord Mass.; John of Kittery, Maine, and John, aged 21, of Virginia in 1635.

The relationship between these men has not been established, although it is supposed, says Howard Ward Dana, that William of Stonington, Conn., Roger and Richard were closely related, being perhaps first cousins and coming from Taunton, England.

The Billings Armorial Bearing illustrated above is described: "Gules a cross between four crosses crosslet fitchee argent, Crest - A Demi-stag springing proper." This has been taken from an ancient bookplate belonging to the family. The shield with a different crest, is registered in Burke's General Armory Fairbairn's Book of Crests registers "A buck trippant proper," instead of a demi-buck or stag.

This Billing Coat-of-Arms is the same as that given in George Baker's reference, except the colors are reversed and the cross, instead of being voided, is solid. If it were voided, the middle of the cross would be cut out so that the field is seen through it with nothing but its outward hem or edge left.

Translated into non-Heraldic terms: A red (gules) shield charged with a silver (argent) cross between four small silver crosses. These small crosses are pointed at the bottom (fitchee); also, there are extra bars crossing the arms (crosslet).

The cross denotes Crusader ancestry, and is emblematic of sacrifice, suffering and sorrow. It is the badge of the Christian.

The large cross in the center of the shield is one of nine so-called Honourable Ordinaries, straight-sided figures one-third the width of the shield, first symbols used in identifying men encased in armour. There are some 190 forms of the cross, and some of them have a special meaning.

The cross crosslet, as used by the Church of England, denotes "the four-fold mystery of the Cross." When the leader of the Crusades halted his band, or signalled the men to prayer, or led them to the next point, he would cut a branch from a tree, shape it in the form of a cross, point the end, and stick it in the ground. Thus the fitchee or pointed cross, was granted to the leaders of the Crusades.

Colors are representative of the personal characteristics of the original bearer, granted only if he be worthy. Red signifies courage and magnanimity; silver, sincerity and peace.

A Coat-of-Arms is not considered complete without being decorated with the mantling and helmet, which the men wore in medieval times. The mantling was a large scarf of heavy cloth or leather thrown over the helmet to protect the neck from the heat of the sun, the armour from rust, and to foil the enemy's sword.

These mantlings must have the main color of the Coat-of-Arms on the outside and the main metal for the lining. There must also be a wreath of the colors holding the mantling on to the helmet, six strands showing, the first of the metal, second of the color, and then alternating. Upon this six-stranded wreath the crest rests, should there be one granted.

PELOUBET ARMS CORRECTION

Additional work on the Peloubet Coat-of-Arms has revealed that the colors, as given in the article printed August 1955, are incorrect. Even though the material used had been gathered in France by the family, and presumed correct, closer scrutiny led to a revision of the colors.

The correct description is found in Morenas' GRAND ARMORIAL DE FRANCE entry 8145, Vol. 2, p. 367; and in Rietstap's ARMORIAL GENERAL, under Chabrier de la Borde. Morenas gives the lineage for this same family from Jean de Chabrier to Gabriel Christian.

The Arms as given in Rietstap are: Chabrier de la Borde - (Guyenne) D'argent a la croix de gueules bordée de sable chargée de trois roses du champ sur le montant et de deux lions passant d'or sur la traverse.

This would be a silver shield charged with a cross of red finbriated sable (black) charged with three roses of the field (silver) on the upright, two lions of gold on the traverse.

AGE OF CONSENT FOR MARRIAGE

I recently secured a document put out in 1951 by the National Legal Aid Association of Rochester, New York, for the Committee on Service to the Armed Forces. This gives, in chart form, the legal requirements for marriage, divorce, annulment and separation.

It amazed me to note the low "age of consent" for marriage in many states. In Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Washington the "boy" need only be 14 and the girl 12!

This is helped a bit by a required waiting period that varies in the different states, except Maine, where there is no waiting period. New Hampshire has the highest requirement, for in that state the man must be twenty years of age and his prospective bride eighteen, with a five day waiting period. Of course, with the consent of the parents, any reasonable age is legal in any state. But think of a couple, aged fourteen and twelve respectively, being able to enter upon such a venture for the rest of their life expectancy!

MORE AND MORE PEOPLE Are Using Gyro Converters

- BECAUSE GYRO CONVERTERS look better and sell faster. Made of heavy bright brass with sturdy chimney prongs, they stand up in use and give customer satisfaction.
- BECAUSE GYRO CONVERTERS are safe — approved socket and cord with moulded plug is safely insulated to 8000 volts.
- BECAUSE Only GYRO CONVERTERS have the ORIGINAL STYLE WICK KEY—no unsightly knob to detract from the antiquity of the lamp.

Antique dealers find that an electrified oil lamp or one that can be electrified immediately makes a more ready sale. You can do just that with a GYRO Converter—unscrew the old burner and twist in a GYRO Converter and the lamp is electrified, changing a useless ornament into a useful lamp.

GYRO QUEEN CONVERTER

Made in our own workroom by skilled mechanics whose aim is not to see how cheaply they can be made, but how good they can be made, and they are proud of the fact that they are making the finest converter on the market.
